IMPROPER Sightings!

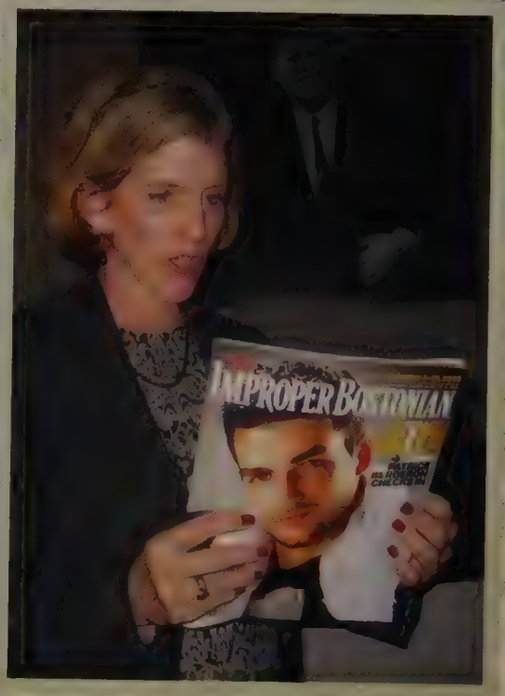
ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER FIRED UP AT BURNING MAN, HELD AUG. 31–SEPT. 7 IN BLACK ROCK, NEV.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Heather Classen visited Jay Leno's star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. Little known fact: Leno's star is the only one with its own fleet of Maseratis.

Frederic Felton and Edgar Builles gave us big thumbs up from Guatape, Colombia. Or maybe they're just simultaneously checking for wind direction? Eh. We'll never know.

Gene Del Rosario visited Bohol in the Philippines and climbed the Chocolate Hills. Good thing it was a cool day, or he would have drowned in rich, velvety goodness.

We really tried to take a nice photo with Pennsylvania Congresswoman Kathy Dahlkemper, but she just couldn't take her eyes off Patrice Bergeron's bum.

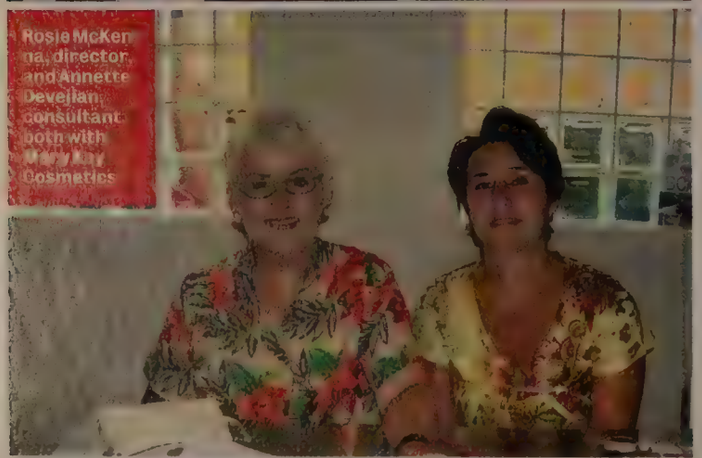
TRACKING BOSTON'S HOTTEST PARTIES

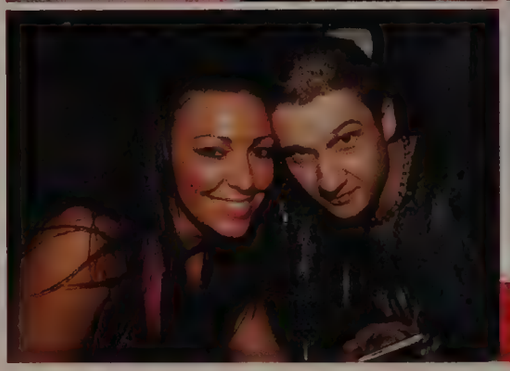


Carleen Haylett, owner of La Pentola di Rame, and Mariella Lencioni, master chef instructor at the School of International Cuisine of Lucca, Italy

A Culinary Experience

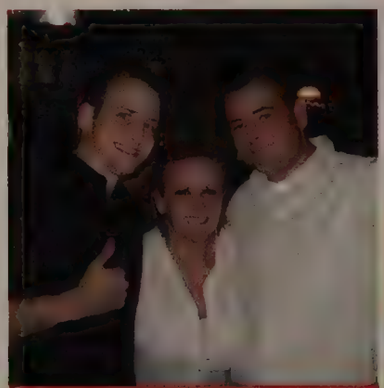
On Mon., Aug. 17, the Boston Center for Adult Education hosted Taste of Tuscany. Guests enjoyed cooking demonstrations. La Pentola di Rame makes epicurean dreams come true on both sides of the planet. For this class, they presented Italian Chef Mariella Lencioni, who focused on her native Tuscany, introducing students to the intricate flavors of the regional Italian cuisine.

Alicia O'Connors, student services representative at BCAE, and Desiree Maniscalco, implementation consultant at Bullhorn



Rosie McKenna, director, and Annette Devejian, consultant, both with Mary Kay Cosmetics

Joel Finks, account manager at Oracle, and Shannon Finks, marketing director at Revolution Rock Bar



Danielle DiGiorgio, sales director at Revolution Rock Bar

Country Rock

On Fri., Aug. 7, Revolution Rock Bar teamed up with Corona for a country-rock bash. DJ Frank White supplied the tunes for cowboy-clad partygoers to dance the night away.

Tasha Barker, bartender at Revolution Rock Bar, and Justin Wilson, drummer of the band Drumhall

Bobby Telfer, Jacqui Devine and Kevin Towey, all bartenders at Green Briar

A Celebratory Occasion

On Fri., Aug. 14, the Green Briar held its 20th year anniversary party. Guest enjoyed complimentary appetizers by Green Briar and live music by the Bare Knuckle Boxers.

Jason Medeiros, brand manager at Burke Distributor; Dessie Kerins, district manager for Briar Group; and Ben Brearley, Massachusetts district manager for Corona

Jill Gigante, marketing director with the Briar Group, and Mark Campbell, owner of John Ra Marketing

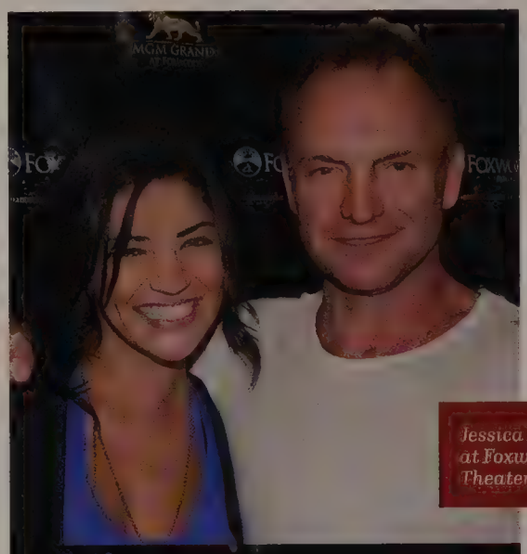
GAMBLING MAN

A Taste of Native American Culture



The following is a glimpse inside a press junket, one of the few perks of being a journalist: A PR flack calls to ask if you want to stay at the MGM Grand at Foxwoods, get wined and dined and the full VIP bum-kissing routine, including a spa treatment, and see a Sting concert from the best seats in the house. You obviously say yes.

Never mind that I personally don't like casinos, because they're up there with airports and shopping malls in terms of canned atmosphere. Never mind that a neurotic germophobe like me gets the jimjams in that kind of human Habitrail. (I tried not to touch the handrail of the escalator or shake hands, and I washed mine like I had OCD.) Never mind that as we were checking in, a limousine pulled up and disgorged two families whose children loudly and obnoxiously played basketball in the lobby. Their mothers had egregiously fake boobs and wore bikinis and see-through beach cover-ups, while the husbands were smug pricks, and guess who sat directly in front of us at the concert? Never mind that as we were checking out the next morning, the bellman who came to get our luggage said, "Just to warn you: There's a guy being held down in the lobby, screaming, 'Call the fing ambulance!'"

The whole surreal experience was terrific fun. We got to watch a gorgeous Mohegan sunset through the windows of the MGM Grand. We got to eat at Chicago celebrity chef David Burke's steakhouse, Prime, and we got to hear a woman say, "I told my husband, 'I'd totally have sex with Sting.' Duh!" We got to watch another woman wait in line at the bar with her hand down the back of her boyfriend's pants. We got to sing "Happy Birthday" with Sting to a woman in the audience named Celia, who was 87. And Sting still sounds and looks amazing for a guy in his 90s.

Throughout the weekend, there were also sightings of such curious people as demi-celebrity and Ashlee Simpson ex Ryan Cabrera (give yourself an extra 10 points if you just said, "Who?"), bodacious pro poker player Beth Shak, Bruins forward Phil Kessel, gossipeuses Gayle Fee and Laura Raposa of "The Inside Track," and Gossip Girl Jessica Szohr, who inspired the evening's funniest exchange:

"Do you want to meet her?" said one of the PR people, to which the journalist replied, "Only so I can say, 'Hi, I've never seen your show but I understand a lot of stupid people like it.'"

Jessica Szohr and Sting at Foxwoods' MGM Theater

Beth Shak and Phil Kessel at Foxwoods' Rainmaker Casino

The Saunders posse at Beat the Heat

The Comedy of Errors

It's Getting Hot In Here

There's a certain irony to the fact that Earthwatch's annual fundraiser to combat global warming, Beat the Heat, always seems to fall on the coolest day of the summer.

But that only makes it more pleasant to have cocktails under the Washburn Pavilion at the Museum of Science, and rub elbows with the likes of hotel scion Todd Saunders and his soon-to-be sister-in-law, Ella Ermilova, his hottie nephew, Evan, artist and design guru Jane Miller, puckish party planner Billy Evers, the astonishingly handsome Rob Kluin and others of an ecologically-minded ilk.

A steel drum band, little nibbly things, a silent auction and a gorgeous sunset added up to one enchanted evening, but the most memorable aspect had to be the intern wearing a penguin costume, whom I asked, "Aren't you roasting in there?" He responded by nodding his head manically, exactly like all the penguins in Happy Feet.

I'm a Smart Feller

Anyone who missed the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's annual production on the Common missed out on a lot: The opportunity to picnic by the Parkman Bandstand while watching a rip-roaringly funny (not to mention free) production of The Comedy of Errors. The opportunity to ogle a hot actor named Zack wearing a unitard bathing suit and smearing himself with tanning oil. The opportunity to hear me go onstage beforehand and recite the following bit of doggerel: "I'm not a pheasant plucker, I'm the pheasant plucker's son. I'm only plucking pheasants 'til the pheasant plucker comes." The opportunity to mingle with the likes of gorgeous pre-facelift socialites Julie Hume-Gordon and Julia Owens, offensive theater impresario Abe Rybeck, sexy spa operator Tony Liquori and broadcasting legend Tai Irwin.

What you didn't miss was the opportunity to help keep free Shakespeare in the park available to everyone by making a donation, so get out your checkbooks and give 'til it hurts. And in case you're wondering: Despite several glasses of wine, I didn't slip up and swear in front of all those people. ✖✖✖

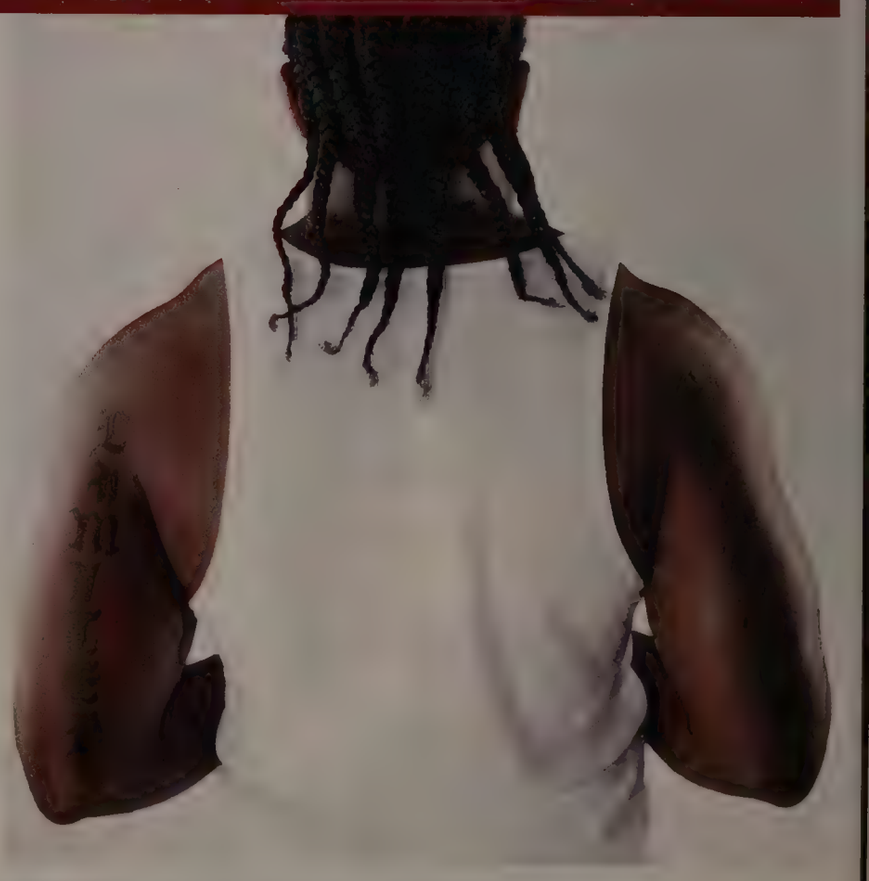
Hit List

Favorite place to take out-of-towners? The Institute of Contemporary Art followed by lunch at Sportello. My son went to the ICA before the playground.

Guilty pleasure when it comes to culture? Friday Night Lights. I haven't loved characters so much since Gilmore Girls.

Picks for the season ahead? Boston Ballet's Black and White program, which I missed last year while pregnant.



Those are just three of the questions Jonathan Soroff asked local tastemakers for this issue. Their answers might surprise you. Boston Pops' Keith Lockhart kept an inflatable version of "The Scream" in his study; American Repertory Theater's Diane Paulus has disco fever; and Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's Will Luera is addicted to True Blood.

For many of us, culture simply means turning on the TV… and watching football. Our Patriots Preview will prime you for the season ahead. The section includes Michael Holley's profile of Jerod Mayo, the 2008 Defensive Rookie of the Year. The linebacker proves that artistry can happen outside museum walls.

Virtual Is a Virtue

NETWORKED

EVEN IN THE ONLINE playground of Second Life, salesman Filthy Fluno stands out. For one thing, he's got fangs. His afro seems possessed by spirits. But Fluno is the highly successful alter ego of Tyngsboro artist Jeffrey Lipsky, a pioneer in the use of virtual worlds to sell art.

"I was in the waiting room at the dentist," says Lipsky, 37. "On the cover of this magazine, I saw a photo of someone's avatar, and they were making a killing doing virtual real estate. That was in 2006." Lipsky logged onto Second Life and began uploading images of his paintings, eventually showing them in online exhibits. "It started going so well I was able to quit my job," he says.

Using Fluno as his front man, Lipsky flits around the Second Life arts community, organizing shows and chatting up potential buyers. "I hook people up with the real versions [of my art]," he says, citing everything from sales of $65 prints to $20,000 deals, most of which are purchased by overseas collectors. One of his specialties is to hold "mixed-reality mashups," simultaneous parties in his physical Lowell gallery and on his Second Life island of Artropolis, with images of one appearing live in the space of the other. "It's all about networking," he says.

Lipsky still finds time to host fundraisers that help the disabled access online worlds, and he's a lecturer on the use of virtual spaces to sell "real" products. "There are a lot of opportunities out there," he says. "But you have to be ready."

Drinks of the Moments

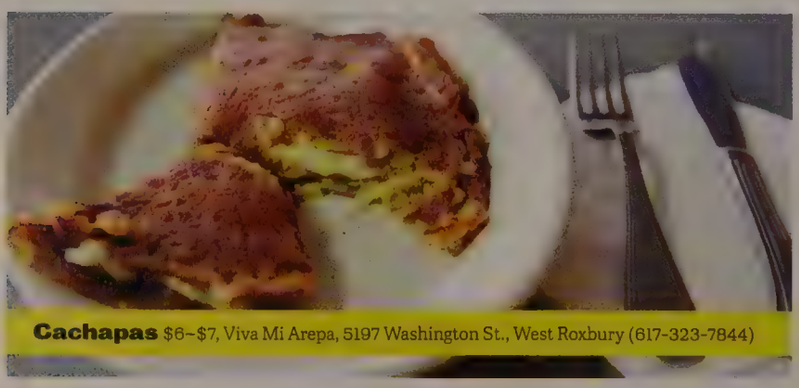
Always Be Prepared

For the past 44 issues, this space has been dedicated to savoring glasses of cultural ephemera. Unfortunately, life doesn't always give you the time to linger over a bacon martini. But as Parish Cafe's bar manager Justin Dalton-Ameen demonstrates, capitalizing on your basic cocktail knowledge can make any moment yours.

Moment 1: A patio party at your in-laws, who only stock ancient bottles in their liquor cabinet

"The concept of a disapproving father-in-law makes me nervous, but a sloshed mother-in-law is a great way to lighten the mood. In an effort to impress the old man while also keeping mom jolly, a MINT JULEP would do the trick. Muddle a few leaves of mint, add a touch of sugar, fill your glass with ice and top with the Old Grandad sure to be in the cabinet. Adding a little soda water will cut the drink."

Moment 2: Attempting to introduce both sophistication and restraint to a tailgate party



"While smashing beer cans off your forehead is a rite of passage, there's always room for something light and refreshing that won't cause beer bloat. One of our most popular drinks is WHITE SANGRIA, made with pinot grigio, peach schnapps, soda water, and guava and mango juices. It's easily made before the game, ladies always seem to enjoy it, and so should the guys—once they've finished funneling."

Moment 3: An after-work cocktail at the boss' wet bar

"While pouring fine Scotch into a snifter may show sophistication, it doesn't exhibit much creativity. Try a BASIL VODKA GIMLET; it shows your ability to craft a common cocktail with a little extra touch. Shake vodka with fresh lime juice, a leaf of basil and a splash of simple syrup. Not difficult to make, and after putting back a few, your acumen of fine Scotch will only seem more impressive."

Good Eats

Viva Mi Cachapa

This Venezuelan roadside staple is essentially a cross between a fritter and an omelet. Like some American flapjack batters, cachapas mix milk or cream, a touch of sugar, salt, fresh corn kernels and occasionally masa harina for thickening. In chef/owner Edner Trenteetun's West Roxbury kitchen, the sweet-savory pancakes start as puddles on the griddle, develop a golden skin and then get folded into half-moons around gobs of queso blanco and other fillers.

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: WHAT'S THE POINT OF PERFORMANCE ART?

ELLEN GODENA
COFOUNDER OF ZEROPLAN, AN EXPERIMENTAL PERFORMANCE SERIES IN BOSTON AND NEW YORK

Performance art and artists have often been thought of as on the fringe, fighting for respect among traditional audiences. If there is a purpose to this art—and some who create it would say there is not—one goal is to take the viewer outside his or her comfort zone. Often performance art pieces place audiences in the role of collaborators rather than mere observers to create an exchange that will initiate new ways of seeing life, politics, art; to provoke thought and dialogue; and to move a viewer to action or new depths of feeling, seeing and experiencing. Traditional notions of aesthetics and beauty are discarded in favor of uncovering the sometimes-ugly realities of life.

HAIR TODAY

Summer isn't the time to experiment with your 'do. With the heat and humidity, you have to work with the elements, not against them. But a new season means different styles. "Hair is back!" declares Michael Albor, owner of the Loft Salon + Day Spa on Newbury Street. Sick of seeing boring ponytails, Albor displays three of his fall favorites—perfect for the office or for a night out.

AMANDA KNORR

Chignon:

1) Hook two bobby pins on either side of a rubber band.

2) Brush hair back with a smoothing brush and pull it into the desired ponytail position.

3) Stick the first bobby pin into the ponytail and hold the second one in your hand as you wrap the elastic around your hair.

4) Pin the second pin on the opposite side of the ponytail and secure it in place.

5) Take a thin section of hair and wrap it around the base of the ponytail to hide the elastic, and secure it with another bobby pin.

6) Divide your ponytail into two sections and braid each one, stopping two inches from the bottom.

7) Wrap the braids around the ponytail and fasten with a clear elastic.

Mermaid Waves:

1) Starting from the bottom, wrap your hair in one-inch sections around a Marsel curling iron, spritzing each section with Aquage Beyond Body Thermal Styler as you go.

3) Once the whole head is curled, gently run your fingers through the waves to separate them.

4) Finish with Aquage Beyond Shine spray.

French Twist:

1) Set blown-out hair in Velcro rollers with Aquage Working Hairspray.

2) Brush hair out and separate a rectangular section of hair from the top of the head.

3) Brush sides of hair toward the back of the head.

4) Brush and smooth right side over and crisscross bobby pins up the center of the back of the head.

5) Brush left side over bobby-pinned area and tuck under the bobby pins, then pin it in place.

6) Tease the top section and brush it over to the side and pin it under.

TRAGEDY'S LONG TRAIL

A son killed, a dad reborn

The Ride
by Brian MacQuarrie

A look at a local murder and a father's complex reaction

INITIALLY, THE RIDE refers to a bike promised to 10-year-old Jeff Curley by two demented pedophiles, Charles Jaynes and Salvatore Sicari. And then, darkly, to the car ride in which they murdered him. Later, the much longer ride is the one endured by Jeff's family, especially his dad, Bob. So ferocious was Bob's reaction that he actively promoted the death penalty by giving speeches and meeting with politicians at the State House.

With vivid energy and you-are-there dialogue, author Brian MacQuarrie takes us through Bob's many transformations. Ultimately convinced to reject the death penalty, Bob withdrew from that fight, only to fall into the darkness of drinking. He was jolted from that, too, when he saw the obituary of a wino and realized that he could've been reading his own. Jeff's tragic death, paradoxically, enriched Bob's soul. ✖✖✖

Nick and Choose { NICK ALTSCHULLER }

LIVING THE HIGH LIFE

Nick learns how to swing.

NO ONE GOES TO THE circus for the clowns. They're more creepy than amusing. And no one goes to see the elephants. Maybe in the radio days, when an elephant up close was impressive, but now it's just a sad, seven-ton beast in a headdress.

The true draw: the trapeze. It has acrobatics and finesse, but more than anything, there's the scandalous, titillating prospect that you might see someone die.

Heights hold a natural yet terrifying attraction. After all, who hasn't toed the edge of a precipice and, just briefly, entertained a crazy notion. What's legitimately shocking is you'll be doing exactly that within the first 20 minutes of your visit to Trapeze School New York's local branch.

Located inside the Jordan's Furniture in Reading, TSNY emphasizes safety, but definitely takes a push-you-into-the-pool approach to instruction. After some brief guidelines, you're up on a 24-foot platform with no time to pause and wonder "How'd that guy at the front desk get that scar on his head?" That's good, because on my first routine I swung upside down by my knees and dismounted with a back flip, which felt like trying to learn math and having the teacher skip counting in favor of calculus.

Trapeze seems like a simple combination of goals: Appear graceful and survive. But you soon discover some surprising revelations.

The stuff that looks hard is easy, and the stuff that looks easy is hard. I've never done a back flip in my life, but it's simply a way to seem cool while falling. Just hanging on, though, can be a literal pain, as centrifugal force stomps your hands like an action movie villain. And while you're concentrating on seemingly important tasks like looping your legs around the bar, things you hadn't considered, like when to make your initial jump, are the crucial elements to maintaining a rhythm.

Trapeze school isn't aerobically tiring, but elicits strong physical reactions. My feet don't often sweat, but I was soon glad to have chalk to rub on appendages other than my hands. It takes a few skipped showers for me to build up B.O., but after two hours, I had a definite musk. Each series of swings is a burst of adrenaline, and for all its intoxicating benefits, adrenaline is a sweat- and stink-inducing hormone.

With a few passes under my belt, I started to relax and focus on circumstances somehow more absurd than trapezing above the lobby of a furniture emporium. Like how I ended up in line behind a guy who went to circus camp in the fifth grade. He was making me look bad. Also in the complaints department were the liquid fireworks, a fountain and light show that gave the proceedings an admittedly badass background. But while circus boy flew to a soundtrack featuring the music from Superman or Chariots of Fire, my turns always coincided with heart-thumping numbers like Michael Jackson's "Heal the World."

In my final two runs, instead of a normal dismount, I was supposed to hang by my knees, arch my back, stretch out my hands and be caught by an instructor swinging on an adjacent trapeze. Success hinged on the simple act of presenting my partner with "sevens," or firm, open palms with thumbs extended.

My opening run was majestic. I seamlessly tied together my moves, arched my back and then . . . put out my hands like a lady awaiting a kiss from an upside-down suitor. "Sevens!" I heard as I fluttered down to the netting.

It was courageous of me to sacrifice a turn in order to prove the importance of sevens to my classmates, and after each one succeeded, I ended the day with a triumphant run of my own. As I bounced off the mat, I realized that my life needs more exuberant fist pumps. But unless I really get into ottomans, it's probably my last one in a furniture store. ✖✖✖

RULES OF THE RAILS

TO THE E GREEN LINE DRIVER ON AUG. 28 AT 4:45 PM: I'm sure it gets lonely sometimes driving a T, and I'm sure that customers aren't very friendly some days. That doesn't mean you should invite your gentleman friend to ride your train and catch up on gossip using colorful language. I don't want to hear about your dog, your love life, how your coworker hasn't paid you back for the shift you worked for her, or how you like your friend's jeans, while you're driving a large moving object down the street. Don't scold riders for "not paying attention," or trying to get out the side door, thus putting them in danger of vehicles, which is "how people get sued." Start doing your job! That's the last time I ride your train, but I certainly will pay attention so you don't hit my car when I drive myself to work instead!

Glad to be home in one piece

Dear students blocking the traffic on the BU Bridge:

I know you applied to Harvard, Yale and Stanford, which have more campus-y campuses, but you got into BU. It appears that many of you aren't aware of the fact that instead of having bucolic quads and car-free plazas, it's smack in the middle of a city flanking busy Comm. Ave. STOP WALKING INTO THE STREET WITHOUT OBEYING TRAFFIC SIGNALS! As I rode over the BU Bridge yesterday afternoon, I had to stop—even though I had the green light—for a flock of about a hundred of you paying absolutely no attention to anyone else but your entitled little selves. I'm sure you don't give a s, but those of us who live, work, play and pay taxes in this wonderful city dread your return each fall. Next time, I'm tempted to just adopt your M.O. and plow right through.

F.U. (Fed Up, that is)

To all the trainers at my gym:

Enough! Please stop approaching me when I'm running. I go to a $20 gym because I can't afford personal training. I can't simultaneously run, breathe and have a conversation with you. Stop harassing me. I don't want to cancel my membership.

Running away from you

Coppa
253 Shawmut Ave., Boston

Going Out

CURE ALL

Early this summer, the announcement of an August opening for Coppa seemed to come out of nowhere. Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette hadn't publicized their venture, hoping to keep the buzz as Coppa took shape. (A prudent choice in hindsight, as inevitable delays have pushed the date to October). The news may have felt sudden for foodies but not for the chefs. "Ken and I sit around and talk all the time about opening a brasserie or another Toro, and we both know we like this kind of food," says Bissonnette, who will head the Italian enoteca during its first few months. When they looked at the Dish's former space, the presence of a wood-burning stove settled the matter.

The 39-seat Coppa will feature a selection of house-cured salumi (like the eponymous coppa), antipasti, small plates like cavatelli di pollo ($12), and cocktails from Toro bar manager Courtney Bissonnette. It aims to be a neighborhood place.

A crowded one, given the operators' reputations and pedigrees. Prior to making his name with French, Japanese, Spanish and Mexican restaurants, Oringer worked at Tosca in Hingham. Bissonnette cooked in Italian eateries in Connecticut, including Bricco in West Hartford. Before hitting the bars, he and a friend would toss together what is now Coppa's Sicilian fisherman's pizza ($13), with fried calamari and cherry peppers.

Gratification appears to be part of the design. "When I think of Italian food, I think of the Italian grandmother overfeeding people," Bissonnette says. "Here, you can overfeed yourself."

Worth Rooting For

Good pizza calls for good soda, which is why Matthew Seiler started brewing. The all-natural pies he was serving at Portland's Flatbread Pizza Company deserved better than syrupy soft drinks. So Seiler tinkered with wintergreen, clove and anise extracts, evaporated cane juice and CO_2 cartridges—and created a root beer of his own. Five more flavors followed, including mellower sarsaparilla, spicy ginger brew (calling all Dark and Stormies) and blueberry. ELIZABETH BOMZE

THE SPIRIT OF THE RAW

Grezzo sprouts anew.

ATTENTION, RAW-ABIDING citizens: You're about to get more of what you crave. Grezzo Restaurant in the North End—an all-raw eatery where soaked, sprouted, dehydrated, blended, juiced and fermented ingredients are rendered into desirable dishes—is opening another location in Newburyport this fall. Nothing's cooking, but plenty is happening. Expect a similar menu, along with specialty non-alcoholic cocktails made with kombucha (a fermented tea), "super food drinks" and "herbal tea elixirs."

RAW FOOD is apparently catching on in the suburbs, too. Prana Cafe in Newton Corner, just off the Mass. Pike, boasts about "the best food ever" on its Web site. Yet for those hedging their bets, the menu includes "a few non-raw selections for our transitioning friends." Menu items range from kale chips and nori sea-vegetable salad to chocolate-chip scones and eggplant parmesan "with the life force." Any proselytizing is linked with merchandising: The cafe's boutique sells juicers, blenders and food dehydrators for those eager to experiment at home. Hours are unusual: Prana Cafe is open 7 am to 4 pm and closed on Tuesdays.

POST 390 OPENS in October. Brought to you by the Grill 23 folks, the eatery occupies the site of the former Back Bay Post Office Annex. With two levels, three fireplaces and plenty to look at—city views and exhibition kitchens—Post's style and prices suit the times. The catchphrase is "urban tavern," the fare is described as "refined American classic," and creating the house-made turkey pot pies and beer-and-bacon mac 'n' cheese is the urban-refined chef Eric Brennan, formerly of Excelsior.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Stephi's on Tremont makes us feel right at home.

I FOUND EVAN PERCOCO LEANING against a partition near the bar at Stephi's on Tremont fiddling with his iPhone. The spiky-haired chef, dapper in a linen suit, blended into his surroundings at the South End's newest eatery (a spin-off of Stephanie's on Newbury). Both he and the restaurant have a modern look, but they're low-key at the core.

Percoco, who mans the kitchen at Bokx 109, a stylish steakhouse in Newton, was sipping a Kentucky Fresh ($12), anchored by Bulleit bourbon. "I normally don't drink bourbon, but I liked the idea of fresh lemons and tonic," he said, convincing me to try one.

After we were seated in a banquette by the window, Stephi's chef Corey Comeau came to say hello. Percoco fired some questions at him: Where had he cooked before? Where did he grow up? What chefs have influenced him along the way? Comeau patiently answered that he's worked all over the country and at Grill 23 in Boston, grew up in New Hampshire and considers Charlie Trotter an inspiration.

Then he switched the subject to pork chops. "We brine it for about 24 hours before it goes on the grill," Comeau said.

Percoco's eyes lit up as he closed his menu. "I want some of that," he said. "I've never met a piece of pork I haven't liked."

That settled, Percoco described the breadth of his résumé, having cooked everywhere from a Jewish country club to a Saudi Arabian prince's home (he was a personal chef). Considering his current gig as a steakhouse chef, his desire to indulge in the other white meat made sense.

Needing a light-weight primer, we ordered the ahi tuna tartare ($14), a cylindrical mound of cubed tuna topped with sesame-poached tomatoes and a thin layer of avocado cream. Percoco tried several bites before observing, "These are really nice, clean cuts. He's using a good piece of fish."

We also shared the summery crispy, fried rock shrimp ($13) tossed with fresh corn, mache lettuce and avocado. Despite the shrimp's heavy breading, Percoco admitted, "I'm a textural eater, so I like all that crunch."

As we ate, he talked about past stints at D.C.'s Mayflower Hotel and, a world apart, at the Hard Rock Hotel in Las Vegas. While working in the kitchen at the Hard Rock, he sometimes whipped up dishes alongside musicians like Joan Jett and Sammy Hagar. Apparently, rock stars love to cook.

"I like to ask people, 'What's your culinary claim to fame? What do you make best?'" Percoco said before turning the question on me. I answered, "anything Italian," which carried the conversation to his culinary year in Italy.

"I never really understood until I went there that it's best to keep it simple and really focus on the best two or three components of a dish," he said. Sure enough, it was the simple, but massive, pork chop ($26) that stole the show at our dinner. The double-thick cut was moist from its long, briny bath; it hardly needed the dollop of caramelized onion jam (but the added kick of sweetness didn't hurt). A side of smoky, bacon-laced Swiss chard and warm potato salad made it big enough for two meals.

The same went for the size of the signature lobster shepherd's pie ($29), which was bursting with lobster meat but sadly didn't stick to the less-is-more formula. The large chunks of seafood were weighted down by a thick swarm of other ingredients like mashed potatoes, corn pudding, peas and spinach.

No bother. Over orange-flavored blueberry cobbler ($10) and fudgy brownie bread pudding ($10), Percoco touched on Stephi's neighborly vibe. "This spot gives people a good meal, an inviting place to hang out two, three times a week and even take a little extra something home if they want," he said. "That goes a really long way in this business." ××× Community Boating, Inc., held its "Raise the Sails for All" benefit at the Liberty Hotel on Aug. 20. The event featured live and silent auctions, and honored former MDC Commissioner John Sears. Some 220 people attended, raising more than $40,000 for Community Boating's junior and universal access programs.

"The Green Monster Celebrity Chef Cookout" took place at Fenway Park on Aug. 22. Restaurateur Todd English and Mike Crain, executive chef at English's Olives in New York, had a BBQ battle. They served 350 guests seated on the Green Monster during that day's Red Sox-Yankees game. The Boston Red Sox Foundation raised $260,000 at the event.

Ez Sez {EZRA DYER}

SPAMMED A LOT

Ezra tries to clean out his inbox.

BACK IN THE EARLY DAYS of e-mail, storage limits meant that you had to periodically comb through your inbox and weed out all but the most important messages. But I haven't received one of those "your inbox is getting full" notices in a couple years, presumably because it's now on a 20-story server in China run by its own brand-new coal power plant. Which is why, right at this moment, my inbox contains 5,888 unread messages. It follows, then, that I have 5,888 friends or business contacts who are anxiously awaiting a reply. That's not the case. I have five friends and no business contacts.

But I've had the same e-mail address for years, which means that I've gradually and unwittingly pimped it to the wrong people. The other day I was buying a wrench at an auto parts store, and the cashier asked me matter-of-factly for my e-mail address. Which, in terms of relevancy to the transaction, is kind of like saying, "In order to complete this cash sale for a basic hand tool, I'm going to need to see some naked photos of your wife." I replied, "No thanks," as if he'd offered me something really tempting, when he was essentially saying, "May I insinuate myself into your life and antagonize you forevermore?"

To see what I've been missing in my 5,888 unread e-mails, I decided to open a few. Some of my junk mail comes from companies that I actually use: Ticketmaster. Borders. ING Direct. Other ones are a bit more mysterious. Did you know that Wednesday is International Ladies Night at Much martini bar and lounge in Greensboro, N.C.? Well, it is, and I have an e-mail about it. Good to know, because I often get in the car and drive 750 miles to go clubbing. A company called Neuaura wants me to know about their fall collection of "high-fashion vegan boots and shoes for any occasion." But I'm not really interested in vegan boots, as I rarely eat my shoes.

An e-mail from Gourmet magazine invites me to become part of a focus group for Mercedes-Benz. They offer a few sample suggestions that other focus-groupers have given them. One guy wants an iPhone app to remotely start his car. What a douche. I'm half inclined to join this focus group and then provide opinions like, "If a car doesn't have a granite dashboard, I don't find it classy." Or, "I'd like pedals that don't scuff the bottoms of my vegan boots."

Airlines are major spam offenders. US Airways offers me 35,000 bonus miles. Based on the usefulness of my United miles, that means they can probably be redeemed for flights to exotic destinations including Omaha and Omaha, and only then on trips of at least seven days that don't include a weekend.

Speaking of airlines, JetBlue sent me an e-mail saying, "You are so missing out." Why? Because "our records show that you have opted out of receiving e-mail communications from us." Think about that for a moment. They go on to beg, "Give us a chance to e-mail great offers to you. You can always opt out at any time." Yes, I know—because I already did that. Which is why you're sending me an e-mail to ask if you can e-mail me, even though I already told you not to e-mail me. JetBlue, am I going to need a restraining order?

As I paw through my junk e-mails, I discover that many of them come from the same source. Barry's Bootcamp Workout, Sears kitchen remodeling, Victoria's Secret and USA Tax Debt Relief all bear the logo of a company called Spruce Mountain Networks, so I figure I can make a pretty big dent in my spam just by unsubscribing to their list. Well, guess what? The "unsubscribe" link in the e-mail doesn't work. And when you Google "Spruce Mountain Networks," you get nothing about the company. It's amazing how technical difficulties crop up just when you're trying to remove yourself from a spam list.

Well, since Spruce Mountain Networks is so helpful at keeping me apprised of fantastic offers, I decide to return the favor and sign them up for some great deals. Hey, is anyone at Spruce Mountain Networks into arts and crafts? I hope so, because Dr. Spruce Mountain just signed up for the Michaels Arts and Crafts e-newsletter. On the Michaels sign-up form, under "interests," I check off everything: scrapbooking, beads/jewelry, yarn and needle crafts. I don't know what Spruce Mountain Networks finds interesting, so I should ensure that they get e-mails about everything. Hey, you can always opt out, but sometimes you need a little help opting in. ✖✖✖

LITTLE LEAGUE, BIG LESSONS

Baseball is competitive, and other wisdom culled from the writer's Peabody days.

THANK YOU, PEABODY WEST Little League. Thank you for reminding me of my youth, my Little League career and my love for my native city. In my hometown, baseball—particularly Little League baseball—is akin to high school football in Texas.

At about seven or eight years old, you head down to Cy Tenney Park and watch the Peabody West "Williamsport" team play their local rivals. And you start dreaming about being among them. During my childhood, they started allowing girls to play, and my sister entered Little League before I did. And I never missed a game my older brother played. There was nothing better than hanging out at the field, tossing the ball with some friends, and washing down a hot dog with a soda.

When I was 12, it was my turn at bat. My team, the Phillies, won the Peabody West title. That sent us—and the winners from Peabody's American and National leagues—to the Williamsport tournament. I went to that tournament twice and won a single game.

Playing in Peabody West, you learned baseball was a competitive sport. Some boys and parents didn't like it. I loved it. Particularly in the "majors," the highest division, the games meant more than having a good time. They left a lasting impression.

I remember going to a Peabody American All-Star game with my dad to see the great Paul Sorrento play. He had to be close to six feet tall as a 12-year-old. Forget about the "Big Papi Shift" that puts three infielders on the right side of second base, including one in short right field. The "Sorrento Shift" was four outfielders. It was amazing to watch.

Sorrento went on to play 11 years in the real majors, between four teams (Minnesota, Cleveland, Seattle and Tampa Bay), retiring in 1999 at age 33. He made us all proud and gave a lot of Peabody kids hope. He showed us that big dreams, even long shots, can come true.

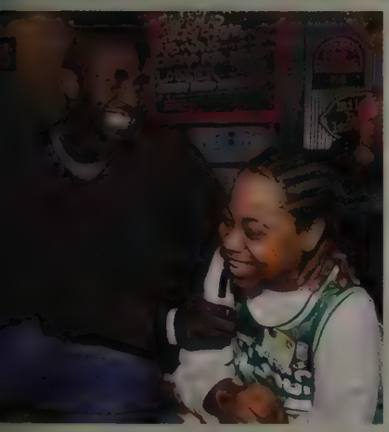
This year's Peabody West squad was the first to pull it off and actually go to the Little League World Series. Although they finished third in their pool, when those boys return to Higgins Middle School this fall, all eyes will be on Cy Tenney field.

I watched Peabody West doing their thing en route to the Little League World Series. Seeing the fathers and sons commiserating after games, I couldn't help but recall my own days as a Little Leaguer. My dad coached me all the way through, just as Peabody West's star pitcher Austin Batchelor plays for his father, Dave. But the paternal connection is a double-edged sword. I remember a Peabody West coach pushing his son around after he bulldozed one of his teammates to get to a ball.

As I do every year, I checked the Peabody West scores when the districts began. This season's journey started with them beating a team from Manchester, 11-0. When you have a strong team, you know it. But until they actually play other towns and cities, you don't make any assumptions. All it takes is a six-footer from Amesbury who throws 70 mph to feed you some humble pie. Mind you, Peabody West has enjoyed success before. Including this year's squad, they've made it to four state championships, winning two of them (2006 and 2009).

As an alum, I was invited to speak to the boys at their 2006 send-off to the New England Regionals. That team had tremendous talent, but of course, talent doesn't always win. Little League teaches that lesson, too. Luck always seems to work its way into deciding a championship or two. If you work hard and have fun, then you win—even if the scoreboard says you lost.

The highlight of my 2009 sports year was watching Peabody West's Matt Hosman hit a walk-off grand slam in Bristol to clinch the bus ride to the Little League World Series in Williamsport. I got chills seeing Matt hug his father, John, minutes after the win. I grew up with him; his grandfather, Tom Hosman, was one of my teachers at the Higgins Middle School. It feels like we're all related.



So speaking for thousands of former Peabody West Little Leaguers, I can't thank this year's squad enough for the memories and the experience. They made me feel like a kid again. ✖✖✖

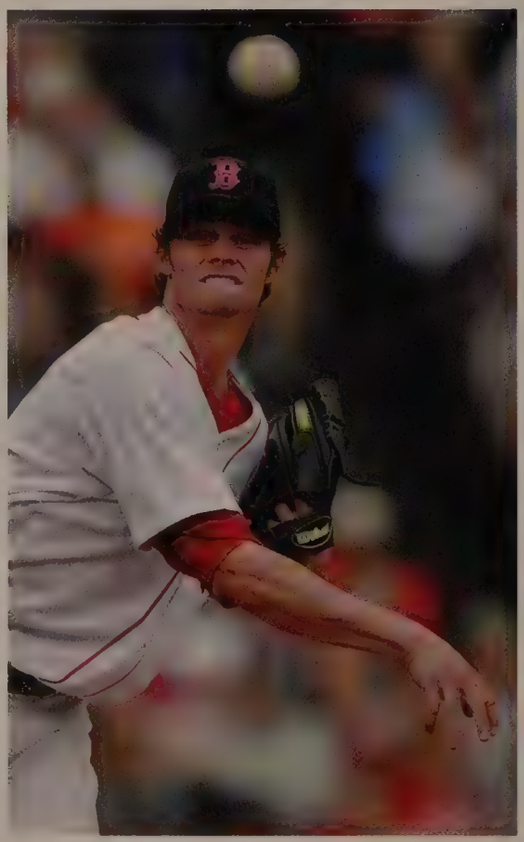
ON JD, T.O., TEDY BRUSCHI AND THE TUNA



5 SOX SEPTEMBER STORYLINES

Daddy's Home These days, when a guy's busted for P.E.D.s, the general rule of thumb is, "Come clean and everyone will forget." David Ortiz politely asks that you take that rule of thumb and sit on it. Ortiz denied, denied, denied, yet still, everyone forgot! Honestly, that's fine with us. Keep hitting like it's 2006, and we'll develop voluntary amnesia.

Does Not Compute! JD Drew's summer transformation has been amazing, as he's morphed from a middle of the order mess to the most dangerous No. 8 hitter in the game. But what's even more amazing is that despite his success, we still can't get behind the guy! It's like rooting for a robot, and we swore off robots after Vicki Lawson broke our boyhood heart.

He's With Leather How can you do verbal justice to Alex Gonzalez's defense? The dude's smoother than a Ray Allen jumper; he's more graceful than a young Terry Glenn. Simply put, Gonzalez was born to play shortstop, and—given Theo's track record at the position—it's a miracle we found him twice.

Bad News in the Booth Dave Roberts seems like a nice guy, and God knows we owe him all the gratitude in the world. But the man who once saved a Nation is now slowly hammering it into a coma. NESN, we beg you, give us Eck, give us Frankie V, give us anyone else! OK, actually, make that anyone but "Fitzy."

Three's a Crowd If the Sox can fend off Texas, the biggest question heading into October will be who's going to be the No. 3 starter? Well, here's one vote for Clay Buchholz. Sink or swim, it's about time we found out what this kid's really made of. Not to mention, Byrd? Tazawa? Dice-K?!? Sweet Jesus...

2 LEAKED CAMPAIGN ADS

Ad #1 "This summer, our country lost a great leader. An individual who dedicated his life to making the world a better place. And now, at this time of national unrest, we must find a man ready and willing to carry that torch. A man... with a killer blog. A man... who loves video games. A man... with a sub-3.50 career E.R.A. That's me, Curt Schilling for U.S. Senator."

Ad #2 "Joe Kennedy will have you believe he's always been there for Massachusetts. Hmm, really? So where were you during the '04 ALCS? The '07 Series? The Manny/McCormack scandal of '08? Oh, what's that? You never even played baseball? Ha! Schilling for Senate."

Ranking the 4 AFC East Contenders

No. 4—New York Jets With a rookie QB who looks in desperate need of an ass-kicking and a first-time head coach who treated the preseason like an audition for the WWE, we're forecasting a long season for the J-E-T-S faithful. And that's really too bad. They're such a likable bunch. Predicted Finish: 7-9

No. 3—Buffalo Bills The good news: You got Terrell Owens! The bad news: Owens hasn't won a playoff game since 2004. The worst news: You're still the Buffalo Bills! PF: 8-8

No. 2—Miami Dolphins There's no way they can replicate 2008, but with Bill Parcells still buying the groceries, you have to respect their potential. In the end, Miami should play just well enough for the Big Tuna to garner a more lucrative deal somewhere else and leave the Dolphins gutted in his wake. PF: 10-6

No. 1—New England Patriots Based on last year's standings, the Pats have the third hardest schedule in the NFL. But with No. 12 back behind center, guess what? Last year's irrelevant. PF: 12-4

1 ONE LAST WORD ON TEDY BRUSCHI

Is Bruschi a Hall of Famer? Eh, probably not. But consider this: With Tedy's retirement, only one active player remains from the third round of the '96 NFL Draft. And he IS a HOFer. So, who'd you rather have rooted for these last 13 years—Bruschi or T.O.?

3 DATES TO WATCH

9/14 The Patriots host the Bills for Monday Night Football in Foxborough. And while the schedule only says Week 1, by the look on Coach Belichick's face, you'll swear it's at least Week 3 or 4.

9/15 September in New England means only one thing... preseason hockey! So watch to your heart's content as the Bruins take on the Rangers at MSG. We'll let you know how the pennant race turns out.

9/17 The Angels take the field at Fenway for the last time this regular season. But don't worry, they'll be back next month for their annual end-of-the-year elimination party.

Soroff On JOSEPH LEO BWARIE

The star of Jersey Boys talks man girdles, American Idol and serving salad on the Spirit of Boston.

EMERSON ALUM JOSEPH LEO BWARIE, 31, currently stars on stage as Frankie Valli in the mega-hit musical Jersey Boys. After graduating from Emerson College in 1999, Bwarie returned to his native Los Angeles to work with the Troubadour Theater Company. In addition to appearing in a musical version of Happy Days, he cocreated six original musicals for Gary Marshall's Falcon Theatre and performed at both the Tony Awards and the Oscars. On the big screen, his credits include Race to Witch Mountain, The Princess Diaries 2 and I Hate My 30s. We caught up with Bwarie on the road in North Carolina, before he arrived in Boston for Jersey Boys, which runs through September.

Jonathan Soroff: Tell me about the name Bwarie.

Joseph Leo Bwarie: My father's Lebanese. I don't meet many people with my name, and when people told me [to] change mine because no one could pronounce it, I was like, "Hell, no!"

Do you think Jersey Boys is the male version of Dreamgirls*?*
No, Dreamgirls is a lot more fictionalized and Jersey Boys is really what happened. It's accurate. It's more like a VH1 Behind the Music, live on stage.

Were you always a Broadway baby?
My dream has always been to be involved in the entertainment world in some fashion. Would I like to be on Broadway? Yes. If you can arrange that, please make a call.

Tell me about your meetings with Frankie Valli.
He never really talks about the show itself. Because it's really accurate, we go into some pretty painful stuff. So when I see him, it's always very brief and along the lines of: "Make sure you're safe when you're in Vegas"; "Don't let the girls walk to their cars alone"; "Let's talk about meatball recipes."

Do you own a technicolor dreamcoat?
No, but I've been known to wear brightly colored T-shirts. The other day, I wore a green T-shirt and the cast was like, "That octane of green is not acceptable."

Was it a color not found in nature?
It was a color I found at J.Crew.

Favorite musical of all time?
Barring Jersey Boys? I've always really liked Man of La Mancha.

When you hit the high notes on stage, is that you or tight underwear?
That's me. We're not pulling any Phantom of the Opera tricks where they have it recorded and press "play." We all sing live, the musicians are all live—even the video footage they use of us is new every night.

So there must be mistakes. What was your biggest?
Probably the time I was doing the knee slide and somehow hit a bump on the stage. I catapulted forward and did a full face-plant. I was thinking, "Four-thousand people just saw me make a fool of myself. Terrific!"

Andrew Lloyd Weber: Does he deserve the death penalty for crimes against humanity?
I don't know if I should answer this. I don't know too much about him, but I do know that he's never cast me in one of his shows, so if he wants me to answer politely, he should give my agent a call.

Does a spoonful of sugar really make the medicine go down?
Yes, and it's a problem because I'm really trying to watch the carbs. They like us to stay nice and skinny for the costumes. They've threatened us with what they call man girdles.

Ouch!
I know. We all call it "Girdle Watch '09."

What was your after-school job at Emerson?
I worked on the Spirit of Boston. I can serve a salad, take a drink order and sing a song like nobody's business. I think they should have me back on.

So who did you wear to the Academy Awards?
I was just a little kid then, so it was probably JCPenney. And to perform, we wore these sort of long gospel robes, so I guess you could say I wore gospel. But we just performed on the Tony Awards, and we wore Calvin Klein. And when I opened in Toronto, I wore Hugo Boss. So I think that's an upgrade from gospel.

Do you tweeze or wax those eyebrows?
There's nothing that goes on with these eyebrows, I swear. And I should have more of a unibrow because I'm Lebanese.

You played Chachi in the musical version of Happy Days. Does Joanie really love Chachi?
I don't know, but I loved my Joanie. She was Christine Lakin, who was on that show Step by Step, and now she's in everything.

Any role you regret?
No, not really. When you're an actor and you get cast in anything, you're pretty much like, "Sign me up." So I've done some crazy things. I played Chico Marx at Universal Studios—things that aren't so craft-oriented just to pay the bills.

Are you a fan of American Idol*?*
I try to keep up with what's going on, but I don't really watch it. I kinda feel like there's a bunch of people who really deserve to have singing careers, and I don't know that being on a TV show where America chooses really produces the best singers. I mean, America didn't choose most of the incredible singers we have, and there's a reason for that.

Song you sing most often in the shower?
You know the group One Republic and that song "Apologize"? I sing that a lot, because it's a good warm-up for the show. Lately, I've been singing Michael Jackson in tribute. There's no question he was the King of Pop.

What do you think of the online comments claiming you're better than Frankie Valli?
People can say whatever they want and put it online. It's very flattering, and thank you, but I'm just copying the real guy. ×××

PATRIOTS LINEBACKER JEROD MAYO MAKES HIS MARK.

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY
PHOTOGRAPHS BY KERRY BRETT

Jerod Mayo wants to know how much knowledge you have about getting dirty. ¶ "Do you know what a tiller is?" asks Mayo, the 23-year-old Patriots linebacker who grew up in Virginia. "Man, I used to work the tiller. Is that too much of a country term?" There's a lilt as he describes his summer job as a teenager. His grandfather restores old houses, and Mayo was on the crew. He got dirt under his fingernails tilling lawns. He gutted garages. He removed toilets. He learned what it was like to have the kind of job where people didn't know what the hell you ▶ were saying if you started talking about typical office hours.

In Jerod Mayo's world, then and now, there are no such things as office hours; they're simply hours, and he spends the bulk of his working.

He's more familiar with the late-night security guards at Gillette Stadium than the bouncers at Boston's nightclubs. Mayo's been known to arrive at the stadium at 6 am and leave only after getting double vision from watching game film. Sometimes that means it's 10 or 11 o'clock at night, in and out of season. While it's not unusual for a member of the three-time Super Bowl champions to possess such devotion, what's unprecedented is Mayo's approach.

He's a film wonk who still manages to have charisma. He spends a lot of time alone studying, yet he has a following among players his age as well as veterans who've been in the league three and four times as long as he has. Unlike the days when he and his three brothers answered to his grandfather, Mayo, the 10th pick in the 2008 NFL draft, is the leader of his own restoration team now.

The last Patriot to be drafted higher than Mayo, Richard Seymour, also made an impact in his second season. But as great as Seymour was, it wasn't his defense with iconic players like Ty Law, Tedy Bruschi, Willie McGinest and Lawyer Milloy still on the roster. At the start of the 2009 season, Mayo is emerging at precisely the same time that Patriot legends have retired or been traded. If Mayo wants advice from Rodney Harrison, 37, this season, he'll have to find him at NBC. If he wants to tap the vast institutional knowledge of Bruschi, 36, he'll have to meet him for coffee. And if he wants to run something by Mike Vrabel, he'll have to make a phone call to the 34-year-old veteran's new team, the Kansas City Chiefs.

There's a transition on defense, and Mayo is one of its youngest, fastest and most talented symbols. "I can still be a lot better than I was last year," he says of a season in which he was named the Defensive Rookie of the Year. "I reacted much quicker in college than I did last year. I know I can be a lot quicker. I've been in the playbook a lot more, so a lot of the plays will come more naturally."

NEXT BIG THING MAYO IS EMERGING AS LEGENDS RETIRE.

He feels he can be better, and some inside the stadium agree. "In only a year, he's gone from a hard-working rookie to someone who is going to be a leader on this team for many years," says Bruschi, who has mentored Mayo. "I hope the ProShop has stocked up on [No.] 51 jerseys."

But as you walk the halls near the offices of scouts and coaches, the comments become even loftier. While Patriot Place has its excesses—from restaurants to movie and concert theaters to a hall of fame—football operations is low-key. There are simple action photos on neutrally painted walls, short messages on stark whiteboards, a barely detectable murmur as position coaches prepare for the season opener against the Buffalo Bills. This isn't the place to find carnival barkers and hype men. So it's stunning to hear the answer to the following question: Who does Jerod Mayo remind you of as a player?

"Ray Lewis."

Ray Lewis? He's not just possibly the best middle linebacker of his generation, he might be the best of anyone's. Lewis has been selected to play in 10 Pro Bowls and has twice been selected the Defensive Player of the Year. The explanation among the wise football men is that both Lewis and Mayo are natural leaders whom players flock toward. They have similar builds at just over 6 feet tall and about 250 pounds. They have the exceptional knee bend and hip movements that scouts look for in linebackers. And because of their body control and technique, they're able to tackle with a wallop, with most of the power coming from their glutes.

HE'S A PATRIOT WITHOUT EVEN TRYING.

The only linebackers Mayo compares himself to are the ones in his family. His brother Derek is a linebacker at the University of Richmond. Another brother Deron is a linebacker at Hofstra. "We're all linebackers," he says with a laugh. "Outside, inside. It doesn't matter." Even when Jerod wasn't playing football, he had a linebacker's mentality. "Believe it or not, I used to play soccer. I was a left wing. I was faster than everybody else, so I used to kick the ball ahead of the pack, get to it first, and put it in the net."

You listen to him, and he's a Patriot without even trying. When addressing a group of reporters, he's interesting without being too interesting. He keeps his answers short and instinctively glances at the clock to see exactly how much time he has until the next meeting. Coach Bill Belichick first mentioned the need for his defense to get younger and faster in 2002, after the team's disappointing follow-up to their championship. Before Mayo, it seemed to be a passive-aggressive statement for the linebackers. The unit would get younger, and then sign ageless Junior Seau. They desperately needed a young, playmaking star, but refused to draft one until Mayo came along.

Of course, the Patriots found him in an appropriate place. As other likely top draftees headed to New York, dressed in suits with five-figure price tags, for a televised event, Mayo decided he didn't want to be there. He wanted to be at home in Hampton, Va. So as the Patriots prepared to draft him, Mayo was outside with his mother, Denise Hinds. He was out there once again getting his hands dirty and raking the leaves. ✖✖✖

BACK IN ACTION

'Tis that time of year when men's thoughts turn to third-down conversions and point spreads, and entire broods pack off to the Gillette parking lot to spend a morn roasting meats and drinking beer redolent of the spices of Octoberfest. In recent years, some number of womenfolk have joined the Sunday pilgrims as well, boring headlong into the crucible of bladder endurance known as Route 1 in Foxborough, just for a chance to glimpse the dimpled chin of their chosen leader. It's a time when the air grows crisp and one's sense of self-worth may very well hinge on whether Randy Moss goes for 99 yards or 100. It's football season, and honestly, it's here already? Sorry, but ▶

A few things we know—and don't know—about the upcoming season in an act of defiance, we're still drinking Sam Summer until the end of September.

BY EZRA DYER

However, it's time to take a look at our New England Patriots and discuss/hypothesize/make wildass guesses as to how their season will shape up. Granted, the most savvy experts have a way of getting their predictions entirely wrong. (As evidenced by the yearly "team that all the experts think will be awesome but turns out to completely rot," an honor that most recently went to the 2008 Jaguars.) And we're not even close to being savvy, let alone experts. Nonetheless, there are certain aspects of the 2009 Patriots that seem securely in place, and others that will remain a mystery until such time that they aren't (history has shown that you shall know what Bill Belichick is planning once he's done it, and not a second sooner). That said, here are five things we know about the 2009 Patriots, and five things we don't know.

GONE DEEP RANDY MOSS IS THE EVER-PRESENT THREAT.

WHAT WE KNOW:

Jerod Mayo is a beast, and Derrick Burgess will pressure QBs. Mayo won the 2008 Defensive Rookie of the Year award, and this season he plans to expand on his diverse on-field interests—which run the gamut from tackling people all the way to leveling people. Burgess, acquired from the Raiders, looks like he could be one of those guys who came from a crappy team (the Raiders) to an awesome team (the Patriots) and thus will return to the form he enjoyed a few years back, when he was a Pro-Bowler. Randy Moss should be able to provide advice on making the transition, as well as some encouraging words about the benefits of playing for a team owner who actually happens to be alive.

WHAT WE DON'T KNOW:

Whether the Asante Samuel Memorial Hole in the D will be filled this year. We hope that Burgess and company put enough pressure on opposing QBs that they don't have time to throw bombs down the sidelines, because that's exactly the sort of thing that's been a recurring problem since the interception machine known as Asante Samuel left for greener pastures (and disproved the Lawyer Milloy/Ty Law Theorem, which said that even big-name defensive players are ultimately expendable). Fortunately, we have a solution for this, so just hear us out for a second. Two words: Usain Bolt. ▶ He's the fastest human being on the planet, and therefore unburnable. We teach him that he can't touch the receiver after five yards, and he's good to go. The best part is that we could probably sign him for about $300,000, which he'd be totally psyched about because sprinters probably make about 30 grand plus free spandex. Of course, this won't happen. But we're honestly asking: Why not?

EAT HIS DUST SPRINTER USAIN BOLT AS THE NFL'S SPEEDIEST CORNERBACK?

WHAT WE KNOW:

Brett Favre ▲ will find a way to screw us. Favre's Packers should've beaten the Giants and gone to the Super Bowl two years ago. There's no way to know what would've happened then, but sophisticated data modeling software calculates that the Pats would've beaten the Packers 98-6 with Favre throwing eight picks. Instead, we got the Helmet Catch. Thanks, Favre. Then, last year, the Pats just needed the Jets to not totally stink at the end of the season. Of course, they totally stunk, thus screwing up the rankings such that the 11-5 Patriots missed the playoffs entirely. Is it possible, though, that an 11-5 Patriots team using its backup quarterback could win the Super Bowl? It sounds unlikely. Indeed, such a thing hasn't happened since at least, oh, 2002.

WHAT WE DON'T KNOW:

How Brett Favre will screw us. Our hunch is that the critical moment will come Oct. 25, when Mayo intercepts a severely wayward Favre pass and then suffers season-ending hypothermia during the return. This unusual injury arises from the fact that at the time of the interception, the Vikings are playing in Pittsburgh and the Patriots are playing the Tampa Bay Buccaneers at Wembley Stadium in London, England. Speaking of which: Thanks, NFL. Never mind that 13 of the 16 teams on the Patriots schedule were .500 or better last year, but the Pats also have to fly to England to play in front of a bunch of Carlsberg-swilling louts who think footballs are round and bone-crunching hits are for spectators. Probably the Pats will use a plane that Favre flew in, and everyone will get swine flu.

WHAT WE KNOW:

If you have a fantasy team with Tom Brady, Moss, Wes Welker or maybe even Joey Galloway, you'll kick ass. We don't expect the air game to return to the heady days of 2007, but the essential components of that record-breaking team are still here: Moss as the ever-present threat to go deep, Welker to hit shorter routes and Brady to get them the ball. Even Galloway's role—the vet who was a star on another team but is more like a third option here—is reminiscent of Donte Stallworth circa 2007. Alas, poor Stallworth.

WHAT WE DON'T KNOW:

Whether we'll have a run longer than eight yards over the course of the season. Kevin Faulk and Fred Taylor look like our most reliable running backs, and that's not a horrible thing. Those two hit the holes and keep the defense honest. Because the Patriots are like a guy who bought a lemon Maserati and realized it's uncomfortable, gets horrible mileage and is prone to catching fire, so he ends up driving his Camry while the Maserati sits in the driveway. Every so often, the neighbors ask, "Hey, you gonna keep that Maserati?" and the guy says, "Yeah, this thing's really got a lot of potential, if I can ever get it running right." Which never happens. But you know what? That Camry gets the job done. It might not impress a date, but it gets him to work. And yes, in this extremely painful metaphor, Laurence Maroney is the Maserati, and Faulk and Taylor are the Camrys.

MARONEY AS A MASERATI
LIVE UP TO YOUR SHINY POTENTIAL!

WHAT WE KNOW:

The Patriots' tight end will get enough touchdown catches to keep opposing defenses guessing, but not enough to prevent fantasy football owners from throwing their laptops against the wall on a weekly basis.

WHAT WE DON'T KNOW:

Who that tight end will be. Chris Baker? Ben Watson? Watson is the incumbent, but the fact that the Patriots signed Baker lends some inherent uncertainty to the situation. Adding to that uncertainty: Baker's two TD catches in the first preseason game. Of course, anyone who draws conclusions based on the preseason need only look at the 2008 Lions (4-0 preseason, 0-16 regular season) for a reality check.

WHAT WE KNOW:

Brady ▶ is fine. At least, he looks fine, and we know he's not acting. We know this because we saw his cameo on Entourage. We blame that performance on the writers, by the way. It's hard to act convincing when the script has you invite Turtle over for dinner.

We also know that the backup QB isn't Michael Vick. Remember the Vick rumors, sightings and speculation this past summer? Forget, for a moment, the off-field distractions that would've ensued from a Vick signing—he's just a horrible, horrible fit for the Patriots. The Pats offense is built around a quarterback who stays in the pocket and completes passes, not one who turns every other snap into a broken play scramble because he's relying on his vaunted "mobility" instead of his much less vaunted "arm." Good luck, Philadelphia! Way to give your famously sensitive starting QB a preseason present: raging insecurity.

WHAT WE DON'T KNOW:

What if the unspeakable happens, and Brady goes down again? Who will step up behind center? To paraphrase former Celtics coach and restaurant-sex enthusiast Rick Pitino, Doug Flutie isn't walking through that door. The bottom line: It doesn't matter. Nobody knew who Brady was when Drew Bledsoe went down, and nobody knew who Matt Cassel was when Brady went down. If there's one thing you can bet on with the Patriots, it's that our backup quarterback is both obscure and good enough to start for most other teams in the league. Or, at least, for the Chiefs. ✖✖✖

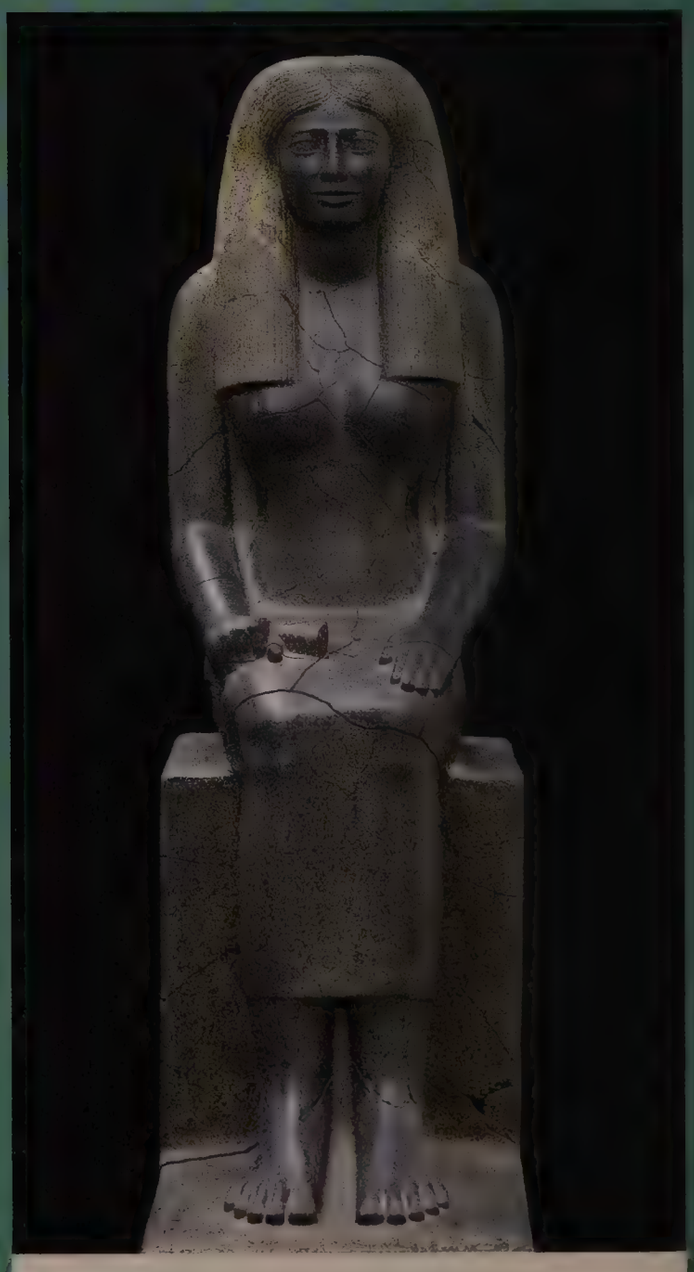
LEADERS IN THE ARTS SCENE SOUND OFF ON THE SEASON AHEAD.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

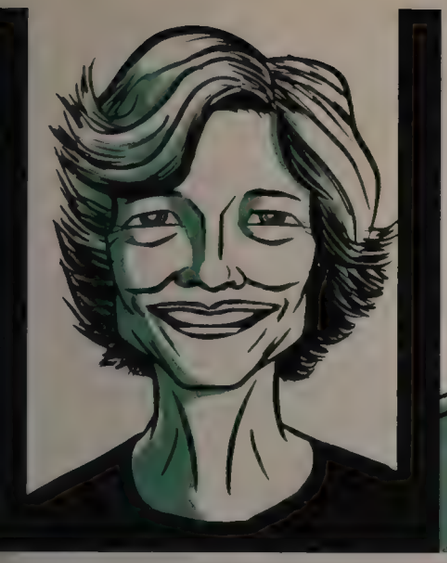
ILLUSTRATIONS BY CHI-YUN LAU



You can count on several things in Boston come fall. The leaves turn spectacular colors. The students return like swallows to San Juan Capistrano. And as the weather cools down, the cultural scene heats up.

This year's arts forecast calls for world-class theater—thanks to folks like Diane Paulus at the A.R.T. and Peter DuBois at the Huntington—along with scattered openings of new exhibits. There's a note of constancy at the Museum of Fine Arts, which celebrates its 15th year with Sir Malcolm Rogers at the helm, and one of change at the Institute of Contemporary Art, which sadly is losing curator Nicholas Baume. Legendary harpist Ann Hobson Pilot retires from the BSO, but the orchestra forges ahead for a 129th season. Exciting happenings are also afoot at the Boston Center for the Arts, which has an infusion of new energy with executive director Veronique LeMelle, as well as at the Peabody Essex Museum in Salem and at Mass MoCA in the Berkshires.

It's an embarrassment of riches. Which means it's hard to choose. When we asked DuBois about his picks for the season ahead, he started with the upcoming Damián Ortega exhibit at the ICA. Then he added Best of Both Worlds at the A.R.T., the Hot Mikado at the New Repertory Theatre and the next show from MFA Greek and Roman Art curator Christine Kondoleon ("A genius. She has a sexy point of view on classical art!").



But why stop there? Boston is home to countless cultural treasures. DuBois raves about the architecture of the Boston Police Department in Roxbury, the sights at the Ramrod Center for the Performing Arts and the pleasures of amateur drag shows. In addition to DuBois, we asked 10 other leaders for their takes on the local landscape.

The one thing they all agree on: We're lucky to be so spoiled.

I CAN'T WAIT TO SEE TINA PACKER IN WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF?

Anne Hawley

DIRECTOR OF THE ISABELLA STEWART GARDNER MUSEUM

What are Boston's hidden gems?
Not so long ago, the venerable Massachusetts Historical Society, which houses some of the greatest collections of early American history, [created] a public exhibition space where you can see original documents—letters, maps, diaries and more—about the early days of New England and the founding of the United States. There are letters from John Adams and diaries of the colonies' early citizens. It's well worth a visit (and a great way to impress a date).

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
The Gardner Museum, of course! And showing them the marvels within. From little-noticed polychrome sculptures of great saints to the sumptuous, sensuous court garden [to] Titian's "Europa."

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
Shopping for the latest in fashion with my daughter, Kate McPherson—a very guilty pleasure. We have fun searching for new, young design talent, not the overpriced and marketed ones. She lives in Miami, so we hunt there, as well as in New York and Boston. We recently got sequined cotton shirts together.

Veronique LeMelle

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE BOSTON CENTER FOR THE ARTS

What are Boston's hidden gems?
Well, of course, I'm going to say the Boston Center for the Arts—after all, the main reason for my moving to Boston was to help make the BCA less of a hidden gem and more of a hot spot for artists and audiences. Looking beyond the BCA, I've found that the contemporary dance scene in Cambridge offers some of the most interesting work that's not getting enough attention.

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
For me, a Boston Bike Tour is a must-do with visitors. It's the best way to learn about the city, and it saves me the embarrassment of not being able to answer questions or getting lost driving around the city. My friends know that I am directionally challenged, so they're usually ecstatic to hear that we'll have a guide.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
I think developing meaningful and successful collaborations across the arts is always a challenge, and Boston is no exception. One of my goals for the BCA is to find opportunities to create partnerships that will address issues in our communities in a more comprehensive fashion.

Your picks for the season ahead?
We're gearing up for fall, starting with the opening of the Drawing Show at the Mills Gallery on Sept. 11, which will feature an amazing array of work from 36 local artists. And I can't wait to see Tina Packer in the Publick Theatre's October production of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? In between shows, I'll try to catch an episode or two of Project Runway.

Keith Lockhart

CONDUCTOR OF THE BOSTON POPS

What are Boston's hidden gems?
The beautiful new theater space, Central Square Theater, in Cambridge and [the city's] resident companies—particularly the Underground Railway Theater and Rebecca Rice Dance. Boston's many adventurous and virtuosic independent chamber music groups. And the public art on the Common and in the Public Garden. I can't believe how many people walk by each day and never see it.

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
I watch Family Guy. And I had a giant inflatable version of the man in Edvard Munch's "The Scream" in my study. Do those count?

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
Too many things to do, too little time. And people saying all the time that Boston's just not an opera town. What's up with that? Come see the BLO's Carmen this November if you want to see how much of an opera town we are!

Your picks for the season ahead?
Opening night of this year's BSO season (Sept. 23) promises to be one of the most poignant and significant in some time. Ann Hobson Pilot, the principal harpist of the BSO for 40 years and a legendary musician in the [international] community of harpists, has just retired. Opening night at Symphony, and a concert on Oct. 3, will be tributes to her contribution to the musical life of Boston, featuring a new concerto written for Ann by John Williams.

Will Luera

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF IMPROVBOSTON

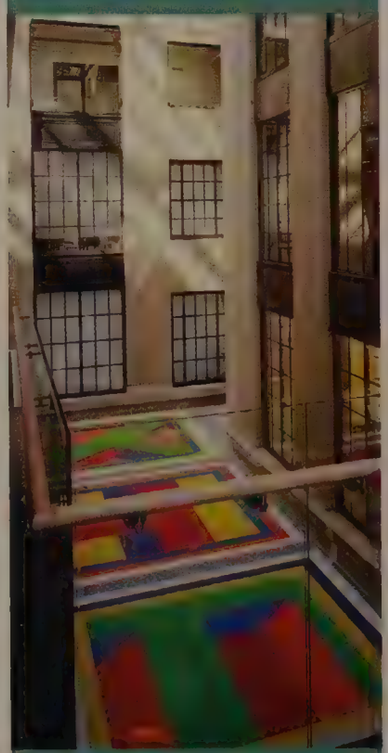
What are Boston's hidden gems?
The view of Boston from Sumner Street in East Boston. Brazilian cheeseburgers ("x-tudos") in Somerville. The Martin Milmore Sphinx in Mount Auburn Cemetery. And waiting 'til next summer for outdoor, bilingual theater produced by the Apollinaire Theater Company in Chelsea.

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
A Lucky's Lounge/Barking Crab doubleheader, brunch on Tremont Street in the South End, Little Brewster Island and candlepin bowling.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
I'm obviously very biased, but I wish that improv were seen as "theater" and not just "comedy." In the major improv comedy hubs around the country, it shares listings with scripted theater productions—[getting] reviews, write-ups, the whole deal. It would help elevate improvisation from being the cute stepchild of both comedy and theater. I also wish there were more storefront theaters, little places with 20 to 30 seats that allow for risk-taking and original pieces. I loved the old ImprovBoston space in Inman Square. I love the Lilypad. And I'm a big fan of the space at the Piano Factory. I just wish there were more.

Your picks for the season ahead?
My bias is showing here again, but I'm really excited about the Boston Improv Festival (Sept. 9–13) and our annual, bloody musical-comedy show, Gorefest, which returns to ImprovBoston Oct. 16–31.

Steven Maler



ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH SHAKESPEARE COMPANY

What are Boston's hidden gems?
I don't know the name of the piece or the artist, but I love the sculpture in the Public Garden at the corner of Beacon and Arlington streets.

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
The ICA and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. They're both so wonderfully idiosyncratic.

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
I'm addicted to True Blood. Not that I should feel guilty, right?

SOL LEWITT'S TERRAZZO FLOOR AT MIT IS MY FAVORITE HIDDEN PIECE OF PUBLIC ART.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
It's underrated, underattended and underfunded!

Jill Medvedow

DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART

What are Boston's hidden gems?
Sol LeWitt's terrazzo floor at MIT, titled "Bars of Color Within Squares," is my favorite hidden piece of public art. It's in the new atrium by the Green Building.

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
I love the Arnold Arboretum or Larz Anderson Park for walks.

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
Hardcover mysteries. And I don't feel that guilty.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
I think it's best to complain in private and praise in public.

Your picks for the season ahead?
That's easy: the Damián Ortega exhibition and the Classical Theatre of Harlem's Waiting for Godot, both at the ICA.

Mikko Nissinen

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF BOSTON BALLET

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
Castle Island.

IF YOU'RE AFRAID OF A LITTLE DRAG, BE VERY AFRAID!

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
Formula One racing.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
Too much commercial art and not enough art for art's sake.

Your picks for the season ahead?
The return of Boston Ballet's Black and White program.

Diane Paulus

ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF THE AMERICAN REPERTORY THEATER

What are Boston's hidden gems?
The jellyfish at the New England Aquarium.

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture? Disco.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
Everyone talks about going to New York to get their fix of culture. How about making Boston the cultural hub it should be?

Your picks for the season ahead?
Oberon, the A.R.T.'s new performance venue.

Malcolm Rogers

THE ANN AND GRAHAM GUND DIRECTOR OF THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS

What are Boston's hidden gems?
The Harrison Gray Otis House in Cambridge.

Your guilty pleasure when it comes to culture?
I feel no guilt in pleasure, unless it is watching Legally Blonde.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
The E Line on the MBTA. It serves numerous cultural institutions such as the Symphony, the MFA and the Gardner Museum, and it's being threatened with budget cuts.

Your picks for the season ahead?
I have to say The Secrets of Tomb 10A: Egypt 2000 BC, a spooky Egyptian show at the MFA.

Abe Rybeck

FOUNDER AND ARTISTIC DIRECTOR OF THE THEATER OFFENSIVE

What are Boston's hidden gems?
Perestroika at Jacques Cabaret. (If you're afraid of a little drag, be very afraid!)

Your favorite place to take out-of-towners?
Toscanini's Ice Cream and the Fens. Though both can get a little sticky.

Single biggest complaint about the arts scene in Boston?
We complain about it too much instead of supporting the great stuff here.

Your picks for the season ahead?
Our "Out on the Edge Queer Theater Festival": Joey Arias (from Cirque du Soleil) meets Annie Sprinkle (from your dad's porn collection) Oct. 23–Nov. 15. And I always try to catch the Gold Dust Orphans. ×××

WONDER WOMAN

Shannon Allen makes motherhood look glamorous.

BY AMANDA KNOHR / PHOTOGRAPHS BY KIM KENNEDY

SHANNON ALLEN had her third son with husband and Celtics player Ray just two months ago, but when we arrive at her Wellesley home she seems more model than mom. "I'm sorry. I'm not usually this Dolly Parton!" Allen jokes, greeting us at the door in a wrap dress. A squad of stylists has helped her make the most of her post-baby bod this afternoon.

Here to assist with a new reality series she's pitching on what goes into looking glamorous, the crew isn't a regular fixture. A typical week involves dropping the boys at school, cooking the family's meals, fundraising (her two-year-old, Walker, was diagnosed with Type 1 diabetes during the 2008 NBA finals) and producing with her Superstar Music Group label. All of which has earned her the nickname Wonder Woman from Ray.

"In my former life, I was the superstar!" Allen says, reminiscing about her days as an actress and a singer in a Motown group. "And now I'm completely content grabbing the pom-poms with the boys and cheering daddy on. It's funny because Ray told me the other day, 'I can't wait to get a ticket on your bus.'" If the Louboutins and Manolos strewn across a room upstairs are any indication, she already has the closet for it.

"My style day-to-day is simple and laid-back," Allen explains. "I don't go to the mall once a week; I've never been that person. I'm more about heart and home and family." Between photos, she stops to get the boys a snack, check Walker's blood sugar and give a quick cuddle. With three sons under the age of five, Allen needs comfortable clothes like Juicy sweats and T-shirts. She throws on jeans, boots and a chic top for games.

"I DON'T GO TO THE MALL ONCE A WEEK; I'VE NEVER BEEN THAT PERSON."

Afterward, it's not unusual to find her in the kitchen. "We have eight tickets to every game, so we usually have a bunch of people over after. I've whipped up a quick lasagna in heels!" The extra inches are a must. "I wear them every day," she admits. "I'm only 5'2" and Ray is 6'5" and a half!" Fundraisers and parties provide excuses for dresses and fine jewelry. "For events I go all out with something fabulous like a little Gucci dress or something D&G with incredible heels."

Even with those fabulous pieces, Allen oohs and aahs over the stylists' earrings, necklaces and bangles. "I need to be more of an accessories girl. I was a tomboy growing up, so the chunkier the accessory, the better," she says. One particular item catches her eye: a silver cuff bracelet with scalloping. "I could wear this and grate cheese with it!"—which perfectly sums up her style mantra.

Q&A

WAS IT DIFFICULT TO BOUNCE BACK AFTER YOUR THIRD BABY?
That's definitely tricky. Anyone who says it's easy is lying to you. I gained 75 pounds with each of my pregnancies, and I had three C sections. So I just got cleared to work out last week. I have 25 pounds to go.

WHAT DID YOU WEAR DURING PREGNANCY?
Comfortable stuff. But I still went to this Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation gala, and I bought this Rozae Nichols dress. It was beautiful, like the color of marshmallows, but it was [also] so forgiving. I mean, I had a full nine-month belly in it and was in five-inch Christian Louboutins.

SO YOU STILL WORE HEELS THAT HIGH?
Oh, yes. I do yoga and pilates so I have pretty good balance.

WHO HAS MORE SHOES, YOU OR RAY?
Oh my God, Ray! A thousand times over. Are you kidding me? If you want to see a closet, he has about 500 pairs of sneakers. He collects Jordans.

WHAT ABOUT CLOTHING?
He has more clothes than I do, too! One hundred percent, yes. I don't want to say that he does more than me, because that's not real. It's just that he has more outfit changes than I do. He has "the shoot around" outfit, "the training on his bike" outfit, "the jeans casual" look; he has "the sweats and T-shirt in the house" look, "the going out to the club" look, "the photo shoot" look. I'm in mommy mode, in work mode, in raising money mode, or entertaining people mode, and that's it. He has many many more modes than I do right now.

IT HELPS TO HAVE A SISTER IN FASHION, RIGHT?

She's a seller, so she sells to Barneys, Bloomie's, Bergdorf's, Neiman's—all the big stores. Every season she'll call me and be like, "Alright, I know you're a hot mess right now, but you need a skinny jean, you need a thick legging." She'll break it down for me. She's there for my everyday.

WHERE DO YOU LIKE TO SHOP IN THE AREA?

I go to Gretta Luxe in Wellesley when I need great stuff for events. I've got a really cute forest-green Rachel Roy bubble-hem dress, and I just paired it with these Christian Louboutins.

ARE LOUBOUTINS A FAVORITE?

Totally. But I'm not opposed to wearing Uggs when I drop my boys off at school if we're keeping it real.

DESCRIBE YOUR STYLE.

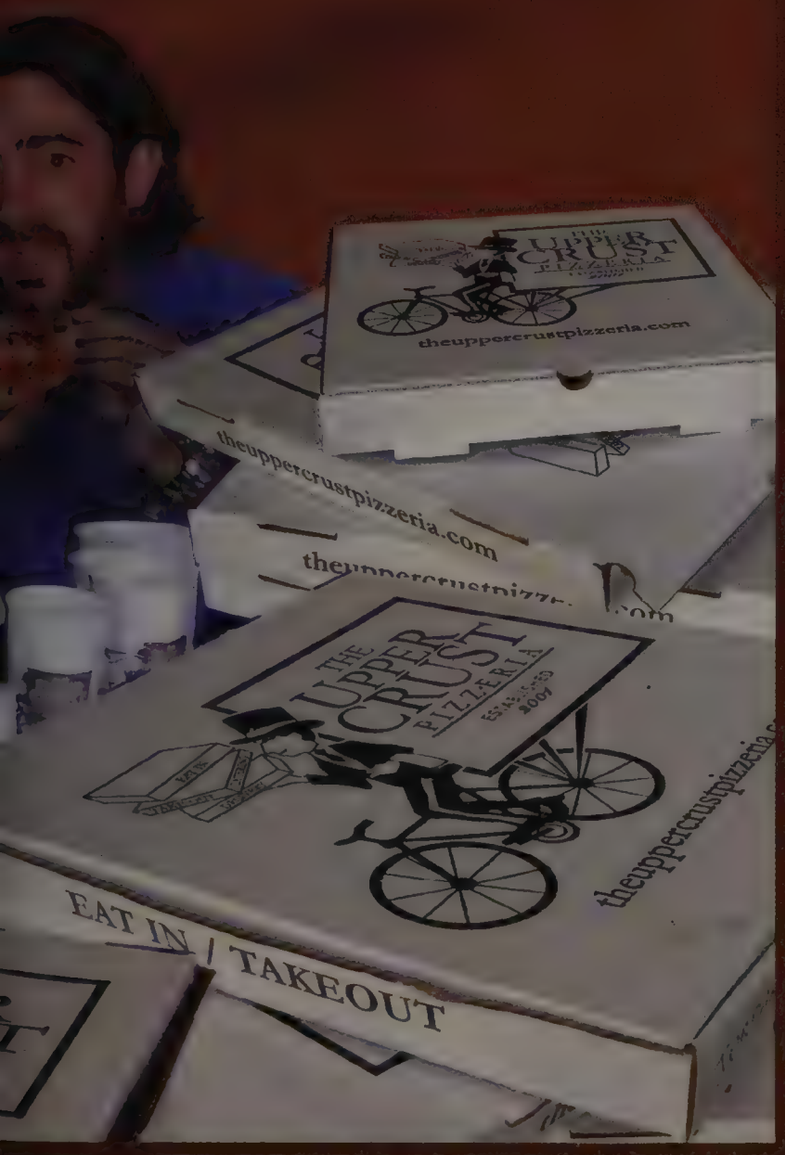
It's very organic. For everyday, I'm completely comfortable with jeans, a tank and a military jacket. I'm more about being who I am and feeling confident. Taking care of my family is what I base all my fashion on. I guess I'm more of a chameleon. I dress for what the occasion is.

WHAT DO YOU SAVE ON?

I'm not a big bag person. I have maybe six nice bags. I could never have an Hermès, because I could put that kind of money toward diabetes research.

WHAT'S YOUR MAKEUP ROUTINE?

I'm not going to sit here and pretend like I'm not a total product whore, because I am! I love playing with makeup. But when I drop the boys off at school, I basically just roll out of bed with nothing on. For everyday, I wear concealer, mascara, bronzer and lots of blush. I love cheeks!



WHAT DOES RAY LIKE BEST ON YOU?

He's actually really good at buying me clothes! He'll be at Tory Burch in L.A. and will have them ship me a box and try on clothes and send back what doesn't fit. The best things I own that I look the best in and fit the best, Ray bought me. ✖✖✖

Give 'Em Shell

Beach Days

Given that summer 2009 didn't deliver in the sunny days department, you deserve another afternoon at the shore. On Sept. 12, stretch your still-pale legs on Duxbury Beach at the Island Creek Oyster Festival, featuring beer, live music from three local bands, and seafood dishes cooked by famous chefs, including Jasper White and Jody Adams. Swimsuit season may have come to an end, but that just means the "unlimited portions" policy is ripe for abuse. Thais Collins

In Mint Condition

Hooked on a Feeling Long before Tim Burton conjured up Edward Scissorhands, Tennessee Williams showed a knack for creating creepy characters. Case in point: Mint, a paraplegic who moves around his attic by swinging from hooks in Williams' The Remarkable Rooming House of Madame Le Monde. At the Charlestown Working Theater Sept. 18–19, this largely undiscovered dark comedy was written for shock value. By comparison, the themes of madness and abuse in Williams' other plays seem as light and cheery as an episode of Teletubbies. Mike Miccoli

Through Sept. 13. Wed.-Sat., 8 pm. Matinees: Sat., 3 pm; Sun., 4 pm. $32-$37. In this drama, three old friends and a stranger in Gloucester slowly realize how they're all connected. Directed by Israel Horovitz.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

Away We Go ★ ½ This is my least favorite kind of movie: one in which nothing is learned from others and no common humanity is shared. There's just a succession of straw-man arguments for a sad worldview that's established in the beginning and remains unchallenged all the way to the end credits. Literary supercouple Dave Eggers and Vendela Vida make the case for their own moral and intellectual superiority by penning roles for John Krasinski and Maya Rudolph, who play two go-nowhere goofballs having a baby. They decide to travel the country to find parents to model themselves after, only to realize that—despite having nothing to say or precious little to offer—they're much better off than all the rest of the cartoonish losers. It's a noxious ode to generational entitlement, and I swear, if I ever see another "soulful" shot of a movie character staring blankly into the camera while twee acoustic guitar music plays on the soundtrack, I'm going to travel back in time and kill Zach Braff before Garden State ever happens. (In the suburbs.)

Cold Souls ★ ½ Demonstrating that not only has she seen Being John Malkovich but also that she liked it, writer/director Sophie Barthes' shamelessly derivative first feature proves that screenwriter Charlie Kaufman is a singular voice not easily imitated. In the film, the invaluable Paul Giamatti, playing himself for no discernable reason, discovers a pseudo-scientific agency that can extract and store the human soul for the dark times in your life when pesky emotions become too much of a bother. Bafflingly enough, Barthes plays this fertile concept not for farce, but as a dull, plodding thriller, complete with nasty Russian gangsters and a mournful, weary tone. The recently soul-free Giamatti performing Chekkov's Uncle Vanya in lecherous, Shatner-esque overdrive is the movie's lone comic highlight, as the rest of the picture falls victim to dreary metaphysical proclamations and labored genre mechanics. Wintry Moscow landscapes and a white retro-futuristic, Kubrickian set-design give Cold Souls a chill that not even Giamatti's trademark hemming and hawing can thaw. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

District 9 ★★★ With wit and originality to burn, writer/director Neill Blomkamp's scrappy little debut begins as a satirical mockumentary regarding a Johannesburg refugee camp full of crustacean-like aliens nicknamed "prawns." Stranded some 20 years ago when their mothership stalled out over South Africa, these ghastly-looking creatures suffer an institutionalized racism that smartly, if not subtly, skewers the country's history of apartheid. Sharlto Copley stars as a bumbling bureaucrat from a Halliburton-esque conglomerate charged with relocating the prawns to a newer yet even more dismal camp. Copley's such a hilarious, ineffectual blowhard that District 9 calls to mind the original, BBC version of The Office, except with aliens. Alas, the movie drops the documentary angle after the first act and settles into routine shoot-'em-up territory. The action is propulsive and often ghoulishly funny, but the movie deflates as it goes along. After you've watched a doomed alien race become obsessed with cat food and Nigerian prostitutes, gunfights aren't as engrossing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

(500) Days of Summer ★★ ½ You can tell from the title's pointless parentheses—and the fact that the female lead is indeed regrettably named Summer—that this debut from music video director Marc Webb has no shortage of the cutesy indie quirk that usually causes this critic to retch in his popcorn bag. But a funny thing happens on the way to Juno territory, as the film keeps alternating between twee, look-at-me set pieces and lacerating truths not often depicted in romantic comedies. Joseph Gordon-Levitt falls head-over-heels for wide-eyed Zooey Deschanel, and the screenplay by Scott Neustadter and Michael Weber shuffles their ill-fated courtship into jarring, haphazardly juxtaposed days of blissful puppy love, waning interest and abject misery. It's basically He's Just Not That Into You for boys—with half of the running time spent warning you about the dangers of over-idealizing your object of desire, and the other half settling for banal, sitcommy tropes like the wise-beyond-her-years kid sister. It's a shame the movie keeps sheepishly backing away from its sharpest insights. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Funny People ★★★ Rambling and self indulgent, super-producer Judd Apatow's third directorial

GOOD GRIEF

Bobcat Goldthwait satirizes the narcissistic side of mourning.

World's Greatest Dad
★★★½
Starring Robin Williams, Daryl Sabara, Alexie Gilmore, Tony V and Bruce Hornsby. Written and directed by Bobcat Goldthwait. At Kendall Square.

Magnolia Pictures

WHEN BOBCAT GOLDthwait's World's Greatest Dad had its local premiere this past April, I was in shock that (1) any movie would dare make a central sorta-gag out of autoerotic asphyxiation and (2) somebody could so wickedly lampoon every tacky, narcissistic impulse of public grieving.

So rapturous was the audience reaction that the filmmaker (who, by the way, doesn't actually speak in the drunk Muppet voice that served him so well in those Police Academy sequels) eventually confessed to calling the movie's star during the raucous screening—just so Robin Williams could hear us all laughing like hell.

This is a troublesome picture. World's Greatest Dad is dark, ugly and frankly a scream, but it doesn't play that way for everyone.

I scribbled all these notes into my journal long before the tragic deaths of David Carradine and Michael Jackson threw the themes of the film into sicker, more perfect focus. Five months ago, World's Greatest Dad felt like an outlandish lark—now the movie is a time capsule.

In a restrained performance, Williams plays Lance Clayton, a failed writer and sputtering high-school English teacher who's going nowhere fast. He's penned eight or nine novels roundly rejected by every major publishing house, and now he lives a lonely life, desperately trying to connect with his teenage son, Kyle (Spy Kids child star Daryl Sabara).

Kyle's a shallow demon-spawn who wastes his days masturbating to Internet pornography and generally behaving like a dude destined to end up on an FBI watch list. Greasy-faced and flagrantly unappealing, he spends special-occasion dinners with dad snapping up-skirt photos of the old man's girlfriend and posting them online. He's a mouth-breathing, intellectually incurious little troll.

But one day an autoerotic asphyxiation routine finally gets the best of him—and suddenly Kyle's a saint. Lance finds his son dead, privates in hand, but unlike Carradine's situation, he immediately decides to cover up the scandal by rearranging the scene and penning a florid, heartfelt suicide note. With shades of Heathers lurking in the wings, puddle-deep Kyle becomes a posthumous icon.

> The brilliantly cynical film deals with grief as a fashion statement.

Rudimentary in technique and distressingly reliant on musical montages, World's Greatest Dad nonetheless shocks and appalls by exposing the vanity of mourning and our often absurd sanctification of the departed. Nobody ever liked Kyle... not even his dad, really.

Yet somehow, this little turd's passing presents an opportunity for a massive outpouring of emotion, a "shared moment" that everybody involved can transform into something that's really all about themselves. Anyone unfortunate enough to have been on Facebook during Jackson's funeral knows this syndrome all too well, and the sideline presence of former Nirvana bassist Krist Novoselic only makes the laughs stick further in your throat.

The brilliantly cynical World's Greatest Dad deals with grief as a fashion statement and all the posturing that makes people feel good about themselves for caring after the fact. It's brutal stuff. Kids from Kyle's high school—popular folk who'd never have given him the time of day when he was alive—wind up wearing T-shirts that transpose the zit-faced teen into famous Che Guevara poses.

At this point, I realize the concept of a decent Robin Williams performance is difficult to fathom. As an actor, he's got so much manic energy and such a tendency to say unfunny things in silly voices, it's easy to forget how great Williams is when he tamps down the schtick. Living out a lie that snowballs to surreal proportions, his Lance spends most of the movie silently stewing. As in his underrated turn in The Birdcage, Williams' silent reaction shots, drenched with flop sweat and anxiety, provide most of the film's queasy humor.

Goldthwait's previous picture, 2006's Sleeping Dogs Lie, similarly pivoted on an attention-grabbing act of sexual perversion (trust me, you don't want to know). It's an odd niche he's carved out, but Goldthwait is proving himself to be a filmmaker of considerable daring and depth, turning sick jokes into cutting social satire. ✖✖✖ effort finds the auteur of today's man-child comedy craze struggling mightily with his growing pains. An awkward though endlessly fascinating film, Funny People is the kind of deeply personal project you can only get away with once you've already banked a billion for your home studio. Adam Sandler turns in a self-lacerating performance as a sell-out star content to sleep with groupies and turn out crap flicks until diagnosed with a potentially fatal blood disease. Alone and miserable, he adopts Seth Rogen's struggling stand-up as a gag-writing lackey and torments the young comic while attempting to repair his own life before it's too late. It's a deeply hostile, uncomfortable picture that exposes the raw, competitive nerves that drive many comedians to ruin. Like most Apatow flicks, it's poorly directed and at least a half hour too long, but Funny People proves itself to be brave and uncompromising. (In the suburbs.)

G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra ★ ½ As far as mega-budget blockbusters based on 1980s' toys and cartoons go, director Stephen Sommers' G.I. Joe is a slightly more pleasurable experience than Transformers 2. But then again, so is a colonoscopy. Sommers is the attention-addled auteur who brought you Van Helsing, and as usual, he seems incapable of helming any interaction that doesn't involve at least three swooping crane moves and a background littered with flying digital crap. Whether the Joes are in power-suits ripped off from Iron Man, or feuding ninjas are soaring though the air clashing swords, the laws of physics don't apply. As none of the objects on-screen appear to weigh very much, the incoherent destruction turns tedious quite quickly. An explosion that flattens Paris becomes such an absurd spectacle, with so many demolished cars, colliding trains and prominent landmarks laid to waste, it feels like a live-action remake of Team America, but without the jokes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Halloween II ★★ Rocker turned rotgut auteur Rob Zombie, whose redneck phantasmagorias offer a unique voice in American horror, has inexplicably settled into John Carpenter's suburb of Haddonfield for a couple of provocative, if pointless, remakes. The location doesn't suit him. Zombie's 2007 take on Carpenter's original landmark at least offered the twist of a tragic backstory for mass-murderer Michael Myers, but the Haverhill native has so much sympathy for his devils that he can't quite resign himself to slasher structure. A loose collection of disconnected set-pieces, culminating in a one-year-later do-over of the previous picture, this sequel has style to burn and nowhere to go. Zombie's distinctive flourishes are banished to the margins, with weirdo cameos (Howard Hesseman, Margot Kidder, Weird Al!) and some crazed dream sequences offering hints of a creativity otherwise hamstrung by convention. Time for another original, Rob. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover ★★★ This summer's out-of-nowhere blockbuster boasts a can't-miss premise: after a bachelor party gone wrong, three addled buddies wake up to a sea of Las Vegas sleaze, with no idea what happened to the groom. A bleary-eyed detective story follows, as these staggering malcontents attempt to piece together the previous evening. Director Todd Phillips, who helmed the similar man-child favorite Old School, still hasn't mastered the pacing required for such screwball comedy, but his cast comes to the rescue. The Office's Ed Helms once again uses his outward dorkiness to conceal a deep-seated anger, and star Bradley Cooper can't help but bring an unpleasant aggression to a character presumably intended to be much more endearing. The off-kilter energy is hammered home by alt-comedy icon Zach Galifianakis, who steals every scene not nailed down with his deadpan, wildly inappropriate reactions and perverted asides. The movie isn't always as funny as it likes to think it is, but this trio makes it feel dangerous. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potter-verse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hurt Locker ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow delivers an exercise in pure craftsmanship, and perhaps, not coincidentally, the first Iraq War movie worth a damn. This pulse-pounding excursion to the front lines eschews political hand-wringing or sermonizing in favor of following an explosive disposal crew, dismantling deathtraps with a surfeit of rotten luck and sick gallows humor. Jeremy Renner delivers a ferocious, star-making performance as Staff Sergeant James, an adrenaline junkie so heroically spectacular at his job, it hardly matters that the rest of his life is a disaster. A succession of jaw-dropping suspense set-pieces, the first hour of The Hurt Locker initially stakes a claim as one of the greatest war movies ever made. Eventually it settles for merely being one of the best films of the year, as Bigelow and screenwriter Mark Boal take a detour to probe James' peculiar psychopathology, with results that are rewarding, though less visceral in their impact. It's a cruel, bitter and brilliantly assembled picture. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

In the Loop ★★★ ½ In director Armando Iannucci's scabrous Iraq War satire, a misfit band of lackeys bump up against heavyweight players on the eve of the invasion—a delicate time in which even an inconsequential sound bite can blossom into a media phenomenon. Supremely savvy in regard to the power of words within our media, In the Loop drops a numbskull British Cabinet member (Tom Hollander) into the weeds of an international debate, with his every vacuous utterance spun and repurposed by forces on both sides of the argument. Peter Capaldi's shadowy political fixer fulminates with exquisitely potty-mouthed rage, eventually meeting his match in James Gandolfini's Colin Powell clone. The two square off in an aria of schoolyard insults so epic I actually applauded. Visually inert but aurally astounding, the movie plays recent tragedy for cynical farce. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Inglourious Basterds ★★ ½ Quentin Tarantino's WWII fairy tale showcases sophisticated filmmaking in the service of juvenile ideas. Continuing his sad retreat away from human experience and into the junk-culture recycling bin, Tarantino riffs on old war movies with blithe amoral-

Despite a trio of guitar luminaries, director Davis Guggenheim fails to bring It Might Get Loud to its full potential.

ity, lurching across Nazi-occupied France for a silly, alternate history in which cinema itself can win wars. Time and again, characters are rescued from harm by their encyclopedic knowledge of Leni Riefenstahl flicks or the work of GW Pabst. Even flammable nitrate film becomes a powerful weapon against the Reich. It's an adorable, if childish notion. Tarantino pairs a couple of brilliantly suspenseful dialogue sequences with far too many dumb gross-outs that indulge an unfortunate performance from Brad Pitt as the scalp-happy, half-Apache commander of a badass Jewish platoon. Tarantino rewrites history for a rah-rah ending that could only happen in the movies, and while it's fun (if way overlong), what's the point? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It Might Get Loud ★★ ½ In what should've been catnip for rock 'n' roll aficionados, Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page, U2's the Edge and young whippersnapper Jack White all get together to jam on a few tunes while talking shop about the electric guitar. Too bad director Davis Guggenheim keeps getting in their way. Overedited into a flurry of disconnected, showboating tangents, the movie sabotages itself at every turn. Guggenheim doesn't seem to trust his material, constantly cutting away to goofy, literal interpretations of the musicians' ethereal musings. For example, he indulges White's worst affectations, filming the idiosyncratic front man in the company of an identically dressed mini-me. (It's supposed to be White's younger self, I think.) The music is predictably glorious, even when Guggenheim annoyingly cuts the songs short. Still, there's no beating a scene of Page playing his beloved 45 of Link Wray's "Rumble" and breaking down the song while rocking out on air guitar with the giddy enthusiasm of a teenager. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded rom-com writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely invites us to watch these characters discover what they do well. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Public Enemies ★★★★ Form becomes content in Michael Mann's audacious take on the final days of John Dillinger, a bank-robbing cowboy adrift in a modern world. Johnny Depp tones down his usual theatrics to play the master thief as a man just out of prison who's living for no future or no past, just an extremely precarious present. Shooting in trembling, hi-def digital video with mostly handheld cameras, Mann upends the traditional grammar of a gangster period piece and avoids the expected establishing shots of lavish 1930s art decoration in favor of nerve-jangling close-ups and experimental editing techniques. The deliberately alienating style doesn't just mirror the immediacy of Dillinger's moment-to-moment existence, it also makes explicit his bafflement at this shimmering new landscape, where both J. Edgar Hoover's Bureau of Investigation and Frank Nitti's mafia goons employ technological wonders that render an old-school desperado like our hero obsolete. Love it or hate it, Mann's technique is some sort of breakthrough. (In the suburbs.)

Star Trek ★★★ ½ What a wonderful surprise. It takes serious gall to recast characters as iconic as Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock with fresh-faced barely-knowns. Sure, there's a shiny coat of CGI paint and everybody's impossibly good-looking, but director JJ Abrams has captured the upbeat sense of adventure that defined Gene Roddenberry's original 1960s' series. More so than any Trek project in decades, this one captures the camaraderie, the easy humor and, most important, the swagger that we associate with the headstrong Kirk and his logical, pointy-eared pal. Much like Casino Royale, Abrams' Star Trek finds ingenious ways to serve up familiar pleasures. Rare for a landscape dominated by dour popcorn blockbusters, this one isn't afraid to be fun. All the phaser battles, sexy green girls and transporter beam antics you'd expect are present, just with slightly unexpected spins. The film's rousing finale ends with the Enterprise crew at last assembled and warping off to what we can only hope will be a happy series of sequels. May they live long and prosper. (At Simons IMAX and in the suburbs.)

Taking Woodstock ★ ½ Here we go again. In case you weren't burned out by all the baby boomer navel-gazing that accompanied Woodstock's 40th anniversary, director Ang Lee and his regular screenwriter James Schamus have concocted a toothless checklist of sanctimonious '60s clichés. Based on a memoir by Elliot Tiber, Taking Woodstock heads behind the scenes, illustrating at great length how a dull young man (Demetri Martin) brought a hundred-thousand hippies to Max Yasgur's farm and wound up orchestrating his own personal liberation, or something like that. From Crouching Tiger to Brokeback Mountain, the best Lee films are tragic tales of repression. He has no idea how to handle free love, so he settles for sanitized retreads like groovy acid trips, morally bankrupt authority figures and vapid flower-power lectures. Nothing in the film feels genuine or even true to the period, and Eric Gautier's cinematography suffers from a squeaky-clean sheen. We get it, boomers: you had Woodstock. We had Woodstock '99. You win. Please stop rubbing it in. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen NO STARS Michael Bay has outdone himself and made a movie bigger, louder, longer and dumber than the godforsaken original Transformers. Again, there's no sense of joy or whimsy, nothing but the pulverizing fetishization of militaristic, alpha-male privilege. All women are spray-tanned skanks dressed like strippers, and every minority is a grotesque, ineffectual cartoon. An early set-piece is devoted to savoring the destruction of a library. Then we meet "Amos 'n' Android"—comic-relief robots modeled on monkeys who speak jive and flash gold teeth. (Bay's big punch line is that they can't read!) Eventually, even President Obama gets dragged into this mess, here ridiculed for attempting diplomacy with gigantic killer robots. Luckily, our heroes know better, so when a bespectacled, articulate representative of the new administration argues for transparency and accountability, the good guys promptly throw him out of a plane and go save the world by invading a Middle Eastern country. There's also a robot with enormous wrecking balls dangling from his crotch that serve as destructive testicles. This is what you asked for, America. (In the suburbs.)

Up ★★★★ The geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios have done it again. This tall tale of an aging widower (voiced by Ed Asner) flying his house to South America with helium balloons has no right to be so emotionally powerful, but writer/director Pete Docter weighs down the bizarre flights of fancy with sharp human sadness. Somehow the movie manages to include a 13-foot female bird named Kevin, an army of talking dogs and some spectacular action sequences while never losing sight of the moving human drama. Breathtakingly animated, Up has more strange and beautiful images than can possibly be listed here, but perhaps none more so than the crumbling old home, born aloft by thousands of brilliantly colored balloons. It's a ridiculous conceit that pays off rich metaphorical dividends, as our protagonist must learn that it's time to let go. (In the suburbs.)

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

HER OWN LANGUAGE

Regina Spektor translates offbeat sensibilities into charming pop.

Regina Spektor
plays House of Blues Sept. 21 and the Orpheum Theatre Sept. 22.

WORDS ARE SONIC Play-Doh for Regina Spektor. From her 2006 hit "Fidelity," where she danced through the word "heart" in a melodic stutter, to her new song "Eet," which plays off "beat" and "feet," she revels in the joy of syllables.

"I love playing around and finding noises and connecting them to self-expression," the singer/pianist says from New York, where her parents moved from Russia when she was nine.

"Language is one of the things we've gotten right in every nation," says Spektor, now 29. "Living in New York, or any big city, one minute you're listening to two Chinese people talking, next you're hearing French, and then you're hearing English. And these sounds are being made through the same instrument! In the animal world, these would be different animals, because they're completely different sounds."

Spektor even mimics dolphin barks in one track on her new record, Far. But it's the sense of detail that makes Spektor's songs as fun and fascinating as her breezy vocal maneuvers.

"Folding Chair," the tune with the dolphin bit, dissects a beach scene with delicious lines like, "I've got a perfect body, 'cause my eyelashes catch my sweat." And in "Wallet," the protagonist discovers a lost billfold that reveals "a Blockbuster card, an old stick of Juicy Fruit, a crumpled receipt for a pair of leather boots."

Much like a short-story writer, Spektor combines keen observations with a powerful vision. "Probably a lot of things I see in reality are jumping-off points into my imagination and things in my imagination I begin to spot in reality," she says. "Those lines for me are very blurry."

What's clear on Far is that Spektor's pop is an artful distillation of offbeat insights and melodic instincts, hinting at her roots in classical music and literature.

For all her seemingly trivial touchstones, Spektor mulls weightier matters as well. In "Laughing With," she notes, "No one laughs at God" in the hospital, during a flood or "on a day they realize the last sight they'll ever see is a pair of hateful eyes." Yet she offers, "God could be funny, at a cocktail party, while listening to a good God-themed joke.

> "I love playing around and finding noises."

"I'm always thinking about certain things," she says, "like the universe, and how the hell it is, what it is and why is it? And what is religion and what is spirituality? How do they differ from each other, and how do they help each other?"

Musically, Spektor also expands her scope. Shortly after writing "Machine" in the futuristic sense of becoming one, she discovered David Byrne's "Playing the Building" project on YouTube and recorded the clanging sound installation in New York's Battery Maritime Building. "As soon as I heard the sounds, I thought, 'This is exactly what I wrote this song for,'" she says. "And the magic is, if that had happened 10 years ago, I wouldn't have known David."

Now Spektor also has the connections to employ prominent producers. Far alternates tracks done with Mike Elizondo (Dr. Dre, Eminem), Jacknife Lee (U2, R.E.M.) and Jeff Lynne (Tom Petty), the mastermind behind ELO. The producers added their own instruments and drafted outside musicians. Yet it all sounds quite unified—and so much like her.

"One of the things that a really, really good producer does," Spektor says, "is try to understand your musical language and help you translate it onto a record."

Spektor has come a long way in translating her own musical talents since her family emigrated from Soviet-era Russia, where she studied classical piano from age 6. She didn't put much thought into making pop music until attending a summer program in Israel. There, fellow teenagers kept asking Spektor to sing her self-styled tunes. She later developed as a songwriter on New York's anti-folk scene, recorded her 2004 debut album Soviet Kitsch and toured with the Strokes.

"A classical pianist is such a specific thing," Spektor says. "It's like being an Olympic swimmer or gymnast. There are people who will fail at being an Olympic gymnast—and it will be a failure—but they become an incredible modern dancer.... There's something in them that's a little bit different." ✖✖✖

Believe the Hype

Rock Horror Show When the Horrors appeared on the cover of British music mag NME in 2006, it was more of a welcome than an arrival. The five guys from Southend, England, definitely had potential. Although their first album sputtered, the boys believed the hype and kept their garage rock and shoegaze roots. Three years of maturing make a difference. In their second release, Primary Colours, the group gives fans an earful with singles like "Sea Within a Sea"—cool, hypnotic synthesizers loop with post-punk vocals. Crossing the pond for the American leg of an international tour, the Horrors bring their updated sound to the Paradise Rock Club on Sept. 15. Note to the ladies: Despite the creepy name, these lads are utterly charming.

Over the Hill

Street Art It may be easier to draw these cars than to parallel park them in San Francisco. Artist Dmitri Cavander captures the densely populated seven-mile-square city with his oil-on-canvas street paintings. Cavander's out-of-focus, yet realistic, works are on display at the Soprafina Gallery through Sept. 26.

Dropping Bombs

Rotten Reference One of the greatest attributes of everyone's favorite four-letter curse is its near-infinite number of colloquial usages. But when potty-mouths find themselves in PG situations, they have to turn to creative alternatives. Jesse Sheidlower traveled the globe to create The F-Word, an extensive list of worthy substitutes. You'll never be at a loss for a bugger again. Sheidlower presents his dirty dictionary on Sept. 17 at Harvard Book Store.

IMPROPER Sightings!

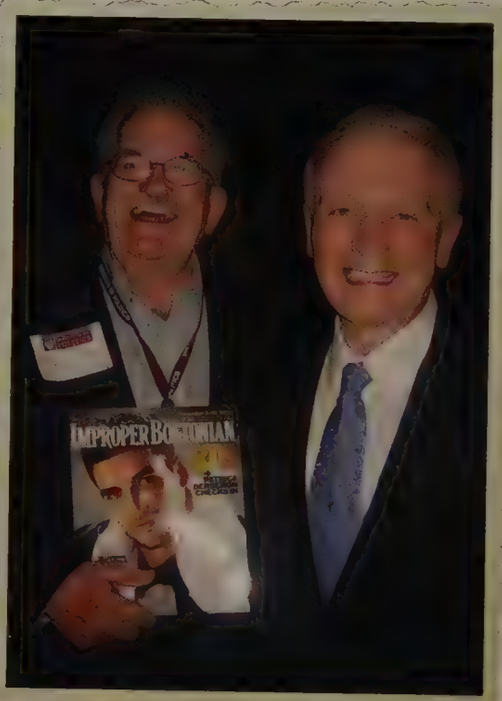
ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER DISGUISED AS A PEPPER MILL AT THE ANNUAL SALT FESTIVAL, HELD SEPT. 10–13 IN SALIES-DE-BÉARN, FRANCE

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



The Corrigan family brought our Kevin Youkilis cover to Times Square. Sadly, the trip was cut short after Youk picked a fight with a copy of "Time Out New York."

Anthony van Dijk and Ashleigh Hegedus got up close and personal with a herd of elephants in Kenya. Man, that one elephant on the left is being a real van Dijkhead.

Chris and Rachel Pardee were married at Rachel's family farm in Newton, Kan. The couple decided on Kansas because Chris' native Wyoming was "a little too flashy."

New Mexico Congressman Harry Teague and New Jersey Congressman Leonard Lance are giddy with laughter at the bunny puppet the photographer is holding up.

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

WHAT I DID ON MY SUMMER VACATION

Name two things more emblematically French than wine and bicycles. OK, maybe a love of all things American coupled with a hypocritical disdain for all things American. But wine and bicycles are right up there. As for whether they go together: It might sound as advisable as scuba-diving on sleeping pills, but as long as you're wearing a helmet, it's tough to beat peddling around Burgundy half in the bag.

A Boston-based outfit that operates bike tours throughout the wine-making world, Duvine Adventures (their motto: Ride. Eat. Drink. Sleep.) planned a personalized trip that I tagged along on.

The cast of characters: Lynda and Michelle, two high-powered New York executives, and our guide, Jen, an ethereal Tilda Swinton lookalike (but we'll get to that later). One thing we all had in common: a love of wine. One thing they all had in common: knowledge about wine. Luckily, I'm a good bullshitter.

We started out in Beaune, the hub of Burgundy's Côte d'Or, with a 9 am bottle of crémant, the regional sparkling wine that's every bit Champagne's equal. Thus fortified, we hopped on our bikes and rode to Aloxe-Corton, the hometown of Corton-Charlemagne, the king of white Burgundies. The legend goes that Emperor Charlemagne's wife could tell he'd been drinking if his white beard was stained red, so he switched to white, and the only one he liked became Corton-Charlemagne. The grapes that produce it grow on a hillside patch that the average American would consider a respectable but not overly ostentatious lawn. After a tasting at a château straight out of a James Bond movie, it was back on our bikes, and a long ride to a well-deserved salade niçoise in Nuits-Saint-Georges. The afternoon brought another tasting, along with the hillside plot of Domaine de la Romanée-Conti, the undisputed king of Burgundies. If you want a taste, take out a second mortgage; last year, a Japanese businessman tried to buy the clos for 800 million euros. It's shockingly small and indistinguishable from the vineyards around it, except for a "Keep Out!" sign phrased in a floridly polite, typically French way. That so few vines could create such a valuable commodity made me consider a career change to growing grapes.

Just past it was the Clos de Vougeot: a 14th-century château that we admired from afar on our way to the town of Vougeot. There, the Château André Ziltener, our home for two nights, was grand enough that I woke up at 4 am afraid that some revolting peasants were outside, demanding my head.

Jonathan, Lynda and Michelle at Clos de Vougeot

Gevrey-Chambertin—a town with more grand crus (nine) than any other village in Burgundy—was our next stop, after a gorgeous ride up and down a mountain. A tasting at one vintner was followed by lunch at another, Domaine Drouhin Laroze, where we lucked into tickets for a concert (preceded by—what else?—a wine tasting!) at the Clos de Vougeot. We squeezed in another tasting at Maison Ambroise, after which our van got rear-ended by some guy who'd obviously been to one-too-many tastings. Then we enjoyed a classical music concert in a setting straight out of a fairy tale.

The next day brought a ride to a scenic spot where we had an outdoor tasting of wines made from the grapes growing all around us, and then came a long coast back into Beaune, where we visited the Marché aux Vins, by which point my tastebuds were completely fried, and I was saying, "Smells like wine. Tastes like wine. Must be wine." I walked it off with a tour of the magnificent Hospices de Beaune, one of the great examples of Flemish Gothic architecture and the only non-wine-related sightseeing I did.

In the morning, we passed through Meursault (which supposedly has no grand crus because on the day the town needed to file the papers, the mayor was too busy screwing his mistress) on our way to Puligny-Montrachet. We were royally entertained by Olivier Leflaive, an 18th-generation winemaker, at his family's eponymous (and gigantic) winery, but the pièce de résistance (see? I did learn some French) was a visit to the house of Parigot, makers of a crémant so delicious I'd like to be embalmed in it.

And then the trip ended with a bon voyage dinner in Beaune. Strolling through town, I gave a pair of English tourists a thrill by convincing them that Jen really was Tilda Swinton by walking a few paces behind and taking pictures of her.

So what I ultimately gleaned from my trip is that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. I can no longer be trusted to look at a wine list without wanting to order the most expensive bottle of Burgundy. As for biking and wine tasting, my feeling was (with apologies to the old Reese's Peanut Butter Cup ads):

"You got wine in my bike ride!"

"You got a bike ride in my wine!"

Two great tastes that go great together. ✖✖✖

Down-Home Cooking

I just returned from a trip to Virginia, keeper of my childhood and source of my love for recipes that treat ham like a holy condiment. Down there, I have a best friend, Sally Logan, whose mom, Mary Logan, taught me the joys of cooking vegetables in a fatty bath. Those two Logans can take a green bean and sap the nutrients from it like termites on a tree. Taste anything in their mason jars, and you'll be a convert to the power of vinegar.

Back in Cambridge, Hungry Mother satisfies my Southern-style cravings with its collards and grits. Turns out, chef Barry Maiden has a way with canning, too. With as generous a soul as the Logans, Maiden shares his tricks this issue, including how to pickle okra—a skill certain to improve the contents of your fridge come winter. For those of you more interested in restaurant kitchens than in your own, we offer an inside look at the making of a menu.

Nothing really stays secret these days. With all the blogs and TV competitions in the eating ether, it feels like everyone has run off and joined the culinary circus. Animal Planet host Jeff Corwin, our cover guy, is the latest celeb to enter the fray with Extreme Cuisine on the Food Network. In his new show, Corwin samples dishes like cheese fermented in a goat's stomach, which, incidentally, would probably benefit from a smidgen of ham.

A Matter of Crust

PIE HIGH

THE PROBLEM WITH POT PIES, says chef Eric Brennan of Post 390, is that everybody's an expert. Formerly at the glitzy Excelsior, Brennan has traded foie gras for meat loaf. "This is a bigger challenge," he claims. "Everyone who walks in is a critic." He answers them with unfussy dishes like the turkey pot pie on the new restaurant's lunch menu. It features hand-shredded dark meat, fresh stock, white wine and a crispy sour cream–chive crust. "You put a little love into it," he says. ANDREW RIMAS

Drink of the Moment

Good Ship

There was a time when one drink worked for all your social engagements, from birthday parties to dinner with the folks. But that drink was the Shirley Temple, and you were seven years old.

Adulthood introduces the problem of choice, but that doesn't mean you can't occasionally revert back to delicious simplicity.

"I like to make drinks that highlight the base spirit," explains Joy Richard, bar manager for the Franklin Cafés and creator of the Cherry Cobbler ($9), a blend of Beefeater 24, St-Germain, fresh lemon juice, grenadine, soda and brandy-soaked cherries. "It has body, it has sweetness and some lychee notes, so you can taste the botanicals of the gin through the St-Germain."

An accurate statement and a wonderful one to have memorized, as it provides a connoisseur's cover while you boyishly dig for cherries beneath the ice.

NICK ALTSCHULLER

WHAT'S UP WITH THAT?

Q: WHY DOES TROQUET HAVE MORE OF A EUROPEAN THAN A LOCAL FOLLOWING?

CHRIS CAMPBELL
OWNER

Less networking. A lot of chefs work with other local chefs or for a famous chef in the city. Whereas I didn't work for anyone else in town and neither did our head chef Scott Hebert, who came from New York City.... We've had great reviews in Zagat, Fodor's and online European things. We're very close to the Four Seasons and the Ritz-Carlton, so concierges send us customers. We have three niches: wine, European and theater.

Good Eats

Not Just for Pandas

The canned bamboo shoots strewn throughout my childhood pork lo mein dinners all but ruined the plant's culinary potential for me. Until recently. New Shanghai's sweet, crisp, tender shoots have brought me back to the lazy Susan. The appetizer is a revelation of frozen-to-fresh-green-bean proportions. And the Szechuan peppercorn oil dressing? Burns so good. ELIZABETH BOMZE

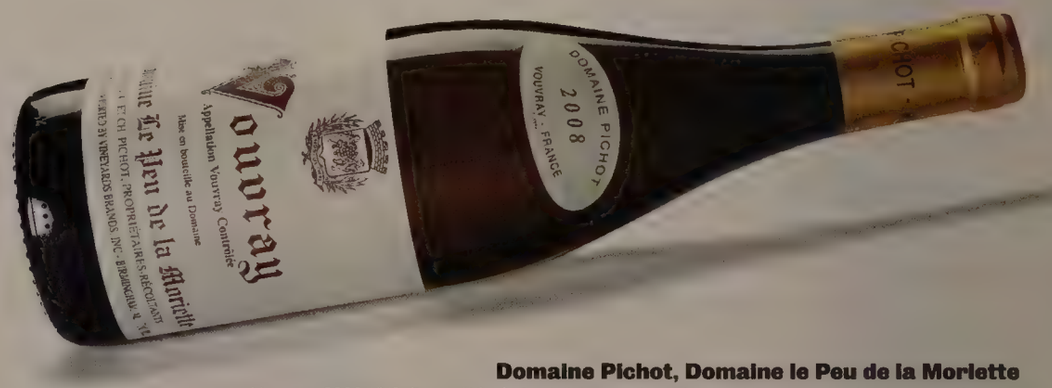
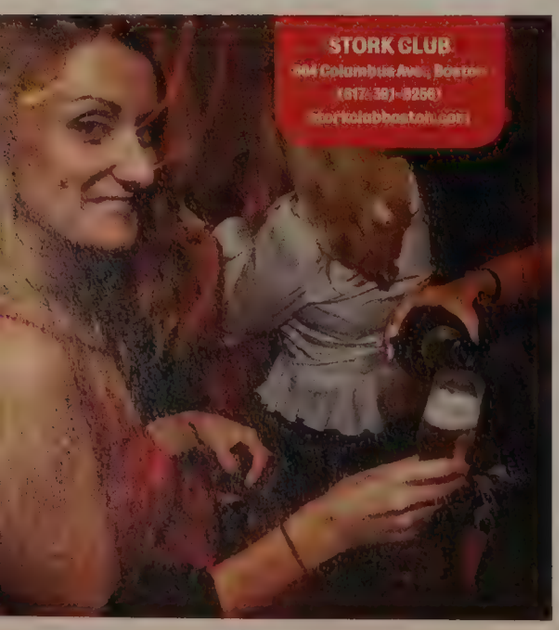
Hooray for Vouvray

One of my favorite fall white wines is an intensely mineral and tart Loire Valley chenin blanc. Some Loire chenins are relatively dry, while others play off the grape's natural acid with an earthy sweetness reminiscent of pumpkins and Anjou pears. Vouvray, the best known of these wines, has dozens of good producers, but none finer in their respective price categories than the following estate bottlers.



Master of Wine Sandy Block is vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.



Domaine Gaston Huet, "Le Mont"
Vouvray Sec, 2006 ($40, Formaggio Kitchen). Huet is the gold standard of Vouvray. A drier style with an aroma of thyme, mushroom and lemon zest, this wine is surprisingly creamy and lush on the palate. Minerals up front round out the dried fruit, with a powerful dash of spice in the finish. Savor it with roasted-lemon-and-herb-rubbed chicken.

Domaine du Viking "Cuvée Tendre"
Vouvray, 2005 ($25, Hingham Wine). Harvested from chalk and silex soils, this one's fruity on the palate, with a hint of baking spices to accent the apricot and green-apple flavors. Medium-sweet, with a peach-pit undertone in the long finish, it pairs well with shellfish stews or mildly spicy dishes. It's also great with fruit and cheese.

Domaine Pichot, Domaine le Peu de la Moriette
Vouvray, 2008 ($16, Bauer Wine). As delicious as introductory Vouvray gets, but beware: If you're averse to sugar in your wine, this one isn't for you. I find it an absolute winner—from the first whiff of tarragon and MacIntosh apple to the honey and lemon flavors. There's also a great undertone of tea-leaf–like bitterness that would suit a brochette of scallops with grilled red-peppers and onions.

Going Out

Winging It

When describing his venue, Ziad Chamoun swings through phrasings, flutters around ideas and loops back to central themes. "It's free music, man. You eat, you drink, you have fun," he lists, adding, "It's not a restaurant; it's not a club; it's got everything in sync. It's a jazz restaurant."

Inspired by the Stork Club in New York City—where guests like Frank Sinatra and Marilyn Monroe created one of the country's most famous hot spots—Chamoun waited 20 years until he found the right time and the right location. "Bob's Southern Bistro was here for 50 years," he says. "They must have done something right."

Stork Club is influenced by Bob's, the Beehive and old Boston lounge scenes, like at Lydia Shire's Biba. The 88-seat club will feature a variety of jazz, from Afro-Cuban to traditional blues. In keeping with the current trend, the food from Jeff Poliseno—formerly of Vox and Carmen—includes laid-back options like yellow-tomato gazpacho ($8) and meat loaf with bacon-and-onion gravy ($16). "Comfort, relaxed food," Chamoun explains. "Mac 'n' cheese, man.

"IT'S FREE MUSIC, MAN."

"We're a concept," he adds, emphasizing the aim to construct something ethereal, something ideally defined by an ability to duck description. "Nobody says, 'Let's go to this place, they have the coldest Heineken in town.' Right? Here, they say, 'Let's go to the Stork Club, it was a great experience.'"

Brad Duncan, owner of the eponymous South End salon, has a warning for anyone who wants to get a Superfood Facial: "If you skipped breakfast or haven't had lunch yet, this will make your stomach growl." After experiencing the seven-step process during lunchtime on an empty stomach, I strongly agree. Using Body Deli's made-to-order products, Duncan smeared delicious-smelling (and surprisingly effective) ingredients like manuka honey, blueberries, cucumbers and grapefruit on my grateful skin. Adding to the experience: a killer foot massage.

I KISSED A GIRL

Love and friendship at Smith College

FRIENDSHIP EVERLASTING IS the tie that binds these Smith College women, long after commencement. Under the slogan S.L.U.G. (Smith Lesbian Until Graduation), the class' cozily connected, resolutely feminist students swirl among gender identities. Homosexuality is colorfully celebrated, the transgendered are welcomed and even straight women enjoy girly kisses.

Straight Bree, engaged to a guy as a freshman, falls in love with Lara, shocking her family. Bree's sexual identity teeters between lesbianism and Not Really Gay but I Just Love Lara. Preppy Sally has an affair with the self-absorbed, broodingly poetic professor Bill, then later marries nice guy Jake. She's almost seen as defecting from the lifelong pajama party of these female friendships. Celia, having been raped, clings ever closer to her Smith supports. Radical April, declaring Riot, Don't Diet with flaming Sixties fervor, falls in with Ronnie, who is documenting child prostitution. But under Ronnie's idealism simmers a dark sadistic character; she's controlling and narcissistic. Half-committed to the cause and dangerously naïve, April gets exploited by Ronnie and nearly dies.

In J. Courtney Sullivan's affectionate picture of this world of enmeshed loyalties, the women often seem surprisingly girlish; alongside ideology and struggles, there's midnight milk and cookies in the dorm. ✖✖✖

MAD MOTHER

TO THE FAT, UNFORTUNATELY DRESSED, SWEATSUIT-CLAD, HAIRDRESSER-NEEDING, NOSEY BITCH WHO WAS MAINTAINING HER FIGHTING WEIGHT AT PIZZA PALOOZA WHEN MY TWO SONS GOT INTO A FIGHT WHILE WAITING IN LINE:
It was none of your business what set them off. Perhaps they were mourning their Uncle Teddy. Instead of having the audacity to put your fat face in mine to tell me that I need to "raise my children better," you need to mind your own business. While you're at it, take a shower and find a better used-clothing store, you fat, ugly, sweatsuit-wearing, nosey bitch. A mother

To the Huntington Avenue bank teller:

It goes without saying, except for a trip to the post office, there's no more mundane task to drain the good from your day than going to the bank. And yet, all it took was that adorable smile from you, alongside your fair skin and shock of red hair to make the experience, for once, not so bad. Thanks for complimenting my hat and actually engaging in honest-to-goodness conversation, and not bugging me about direct deposits and qualifying for that bank credit card. I've missed the kindness of strangers. Anonymous

To Bostonians:

Bostonians vent after the fact to people like me who don't care. Because if you had any spines, you'd deal with it right there and then. I do. But then, I'm from L.A.: ballsy.
Venting

To the Impersonals writers who complain about sharing seats on public transport:

I'm a petite thin lady and, because of that, I'm always selected to share my seat by bigger people. It's especially the case on bus trips. On charter or long bus trips I inevitably get the most ample companion and end up getting half a seat for full price. Recently on a charter trip, they overbooked and gave me only the edge of a bus seat. Just another aspect to this. A slender lady

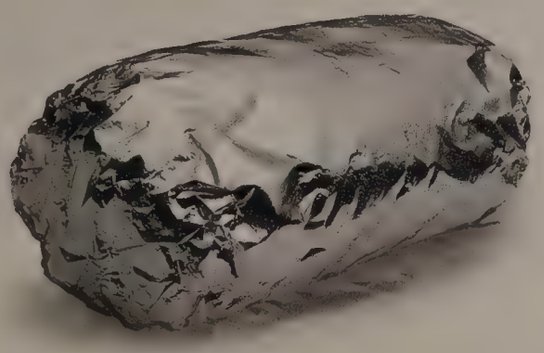
MAKE WAY FOR MIDI

The ex-Excelsior gets a new tenant.

LIKE THE RESTAURANT IT'S replacing, Bistro du Midi will boast two floors and first-rate views of the Boston Public Garden. Unlike the former Excelsior, "rustic" is the key adjective that defines both the setting and the food at this Provençal bistro. The makeover, scheduled for an October unveiling, features wooden barn beams, Venetian plaster walls, and, upstairs, a sandstone and terra cotta fireplace.



As for the menu, executive chef Robert Sisca, most recently at Le Bernardin in Manhattan, will focus on authentic dishes from Provence, such as bouillabaisse and the classic pissaladiere, a pizza-like tart traditionally topped with anchovies, onions and black olives. Bistro du Midi will offer lunch, dinner and a bar menu seven days a week, plus brunch on Saturdays and Sundays.

WOODWARD, PART OF the new Ames Hotel, is set to open downtown on Nov. 5, in Boston's first skyscraper. Executive chef Mark Goldberg, formerly of Mistral, describes Woodward as a modern tavern. "There's a bar on each floor, a fireplace on the second.... It'll be a very social gathering kind of place." And the food? "New-England–centric," Goldberg says, "with all plates designed to be shared." Expect "quite an extensive menu," featuring dishes such as roasted cod loin with preserved lemon and fennel.

DO THE CUPCAKES RUNNETH OVER? IS there room for yet another bakery in town? Apparently Todd English thinks so; he and his teenage daughter Isabelle are opening Isabelle's CurlyCakes on Beacon Hill's Charles Street. Another English nugget: He's no longer affiliated with Bonfire in the Park Plaza Hotel. Watch for a new concept and menu in the same space.

OUR PORK IS RAISED RESPONSIBLY. YOU CAN EAT IT HOWEVER THE HELL YOU WANT.

Our pigs are exceptional. It's not like they're doing long-form division or anything, but compared to the rest of the pork industry our pigs are pretty darn special. You see, all of our pork is raised naturally. Most of it on family farms where the pigs are allowed to roam, root and follow their natural instincts. They are raised in deeply bedded pens or outside. They never receive growth hormones or antibiotics and they are fed a healthy vegetarian diet. Basically, the pigs are allowed to be more piggy. And piggier pigs are happier pigs, which ultimately leads to better-tasting pork.

It's not cheap raising pigs this way, but we're convinced it's the right thing to do. And we don't stop there. We use as many responsibly raised ingredients as we can find, because it's better for the animals, better for the farmers, better for the environment and better for you.

The Good Source-O-Meter helps us evaluate where we are on our quest for responsibly raised ingredients. We are constantly evaluating how each ingredient we use can be raised with more respect for the animal, the environment and the farmer. When it comes to pork, we feel pretty good about where we are, but the quest to get better is never over and every day we take another step in the right direction.

SENEGAL, SAVORED

Teranga provides a different kind of West Coast dining.

TAKES THE CAKES Croquettes de poisson shine among the excellent appetizers.

A WARM WELCOME GREETS visitors to Teranga—appropriate, as Teranga means hospitality in Wolof, one of the languages of Senegal. Exposed brick, colorful artwork and banquette seating provide a comfortable, attractive setting in which to savor the hospitality at this West African eatery.

A dip of olive oil, vinegar, garlic, onions, fennel seeds and herbs imparted sweet and pungent flavors to slices of white bread. Beverages included bottled beers (all $5), ranging from the robust Haitian Prestige to Grimbergen, a high-octane Belgian. The wine list offered Hill and Dale pinotage ($28) from South Africa, which featured a marvelous bouquet and vibrant taste. There's also a selection of juices, with the sweet-tart flavor of bouye, produced from the fruit of the baobab tree, proving the most memorable.

Appetizers, almost all excellent, started with accara ($6), slightly sweet black-eyed pea fritters with a pleasantly crunchy texture. Nems ($7)—spring rolls brought by French settlers from Vietnam after the fall of Dien Bien Phu—contained finely chopped chicken and beef, vermicelli, grated carrots, mushrooms and scallions enhanced with fermented fish sauce called nuoc mam. Tomatoes, eggplant, green peppers and onions, an ingredient that shows up in virtually all of Teranga's dishes, shared a skewer with brochettes de crevettes ($8), crunchy, flavorful shrimp. My favorite among the appetizers was the croquettes de poisson ($7), three moist and tasty fish cakes fried to a dark brown. Only the fataya ($7), small turnovers filled with seasoned fish, disappointed, the stuffing bland and the pastry dry.

The quality of the main courses diverged markedly over two visits. Tough lamb flawed the michoui ($17), while juicy chicken distinguished the brochettes de poulet ($15), two skewers of peppers, onions, eggplant and the tenderest hunks of chicken I've ever had. The michoui, however, disappointed. Traditionally a whole roast lamb stuffed with couscous, Teranga's version was a lamb shank grilled to medium-rare. Pink beneath a hard shell of skin, it was unredeemed by the Dijon mustard and onion sauce. The couscous was tasty, with raisins and olives imparting sweet and savory notes, but it, too, was deadly dry. The dibi ($17), thin lamb chops, rivaled the shank in toughness, but the accompanying onion and mustard-spiced sauce at least lent moisture and pleasantly provocative flavors. The garnish of fried sweet potatoes was terrific.

Mango tarte tatin

Yassa guinaar ($15), chicken breast or leg with a lemony, caramelized onion and garlic sauce, was as moist as the lamb was dry. Alocco, fried plantains, provided the perfect accompaniment. Finally among the main courses, we ordered the thiebou djeun, identified on the menu as Senegal's national dish. A broad range of ingredients, including fish, cassava, cabbage, cauliflower and pumpkin, all cooked in a tomato sauce, made this a satisfying stew.

Desserts ($6) boasted a chocolate fondant and a delectable mango tarte tatin, both of which we preferred to the beignets. These confections complemented the robustness of preceding courses, but the attentive and efficient service was the sweetest reward. ×××

DOUBLE TROUBLE

In pursuit of the most awesome sandwich ever

FAST-FOOD CHAINS get a bad rap for contributing to the nation's obesity woes. Thus Burger King offers apple fries and McDonald's dutifully peddles salads, so when your lardass drives up to the order window you can theoretically buy something with nutritional value. But one fast-food chain, instead of wasting time with fruits and vegetables, is diligently inventing new products worthy of its parent company, Yum! Brands. Instead of folding in the face of nutritional pressure, KFC has decided to Double Down on deliciousness.

The new Double Down sandwich's fillings include bacon, pepper-jack cheese, Swiss cheese and the Colonel's sauce. "But Ez," you say, "how could they make this bacon and two-kinds-of-cheese sandwich even more irresistible?" After years of trying to create chicken-flavored bread, the Colonel hit on the solution: Replace the bread with actual slabs of fried chicken. In terms of milestones in human progress, there's the wheel, the cotton gin and, now, the KFC Double Down sandwich. Yum, indeed.

The DD, being a controversial product, is sold in a lawless land to the south, a place where seemingly upstanding citizens have been known to slip across the border in pursuit of sex, drugs and unthinkable debauchery. I'm talking, of course, about Rhode Island.

So I head to Providence, because the only other state where you can score a Double Down is Nebraska, and Nebraska's already had its sandwich-innovation moment, with the invention of the Reuben. Once upon a time, people thought that corned beef and Russian dressing on rye sounded gross, too.

Even though I called ahead to confirm the Double Down's availability, I'm still mildly shocked when I pull up to the KFC drive-through and see it there on the menu. So this is really happening. I'm really about to order a sandwich that uses chicken for buns.

When I get it, I open the box and discover KFC's solution to the most obvious technical challenge of the breadless sandwich. The quandary, the stumbling block that's halted all prior chicken-instead-of-bread research, is that bread is a means of grasping messy fillings. So what do you do when the exterior of the sandwich is itself greasy fried chicken? You wrap it in wax paper. Because you wouldn't want your fingers to touch what your body's ingesting. Is "genius" too strong a word?

I use the paper to grip the sandwich, which nonetheless slides around in my hands like a feisty trout. But with a bit of determination I subdue the 10.3 ounces of chicken, bacon and cheese long enough to take a bite. The result is a flavor explosion, a nuclear assault on my palate. A weeklong Woodstock where 100,000 taste buds are tripping on pure umami. Anything is possible. Compared to this, an Angry Whopper is a bowl of Kashi. KFC has rung a bell that can't be unrung.

People laughed at the idea of using chicken for bread. They said it couldn't be done. But we're a nation of dreamers, inventors and scientists—gluttonous dreamers, tubby inventors and morbidly obese scientists. With a little know-how and some good old-fashioned bravado, we've entered an era when the sandwich is no longer constrained by bread. Or shame. John Lennon wrote a little song called "Imagine" that seems so relevant to this wondrous time we're living in. Especially the verse that goes, "Imagine all the people, crapping themselves as they have heart attacks."

If I were the bread industry, I'd be running scared. In a stroke, KFC has rendered bread obsolete. What would you rather have for breakfast: toast or fried chicken? And we can all agree that the bread bowl was always better in theory than in practice. Imagine clam chowder in a savory fried-chicken bowl. No sogginess there, friends. Even the expression, "The best thing since sliced bread," is now an anachronism, supplanted by, "The best thing since fried chicken instead of sliced bread."

There's already a lot of hand-wringing on Beacon Hill as legislators argue over the future of the Double Down in Massachusetts. Personally, I think we should legalize it to collect tax revenue, because habitual users are going to get their hands on it anyway. If the Double Down is criminal, then only criminals will have Double Downs, right? Besides, the recipe is already all over the Internet, and any two-bit chicken-slinger can rig a basement kitchen to cook up counterfeits that might be cut with spare ribs, sausage patties or worse.

As for the critics who suggest that this is exactly the sort of mass-produced high-calorie trash that contributes to America's grotesque obesity and general unhealthiness, I'll have you know that the Double Down is actually a great source of fiber. As long as you also eat the box. ✖✖✖

JOIN THE CLUB

Toscano serves up a fascinating slice of society.

I'LL BET THAT ALMOST ALL OF us subscribe to the Cheers theory. We like to go to places where everybody knows our name. In any city neighborhood worth its chops, there's a joint, a bar, a diner or a restaurant that fills the bill. In the summertime, I frequent a wonderful spot several nights a week. It's my club. Years ago, I started going there to write, my notebook a constant companion while the waitstaff took total care of me. I've scribbled in restaurants for so many years that I've developed this weird knee-jerk reaction when I dine out. I'm a lefty. I sit down and move the butter plate, napkin and forks to the right side of my place setting, leaving notebook room on my left side. Friends ask, "What're you doing? You're getting battier as you age." I say, "'Surround me with oddballs anytime.' Makes our life richer."

In that department, here's a typical visit to my restaurant-club, Toscano on Charles Street in Beacon Hill, where I can gather material without being online, on the phone or on a PDA. And where the folks manning the velvet rope of life are amazingly user-friendly: owners Andrew D'Alessandro and Richard Cacciagrani, plus maître d' Rick Hayes. Nice to see pros at work. Recently, the club provided the following exchanges. A world-weary, "I've seen it all" gentleman told me, "My daughter works on a powerful trading desk on Wall Street, and she's seeing massive buy orders on the big bank stocks." Hmm.

A billionaire I've known since he wasn't even a thousandaire waited patiently for billionaire takeout (anything he wants), and I mentioned someone I thought would be a lucky addition to one of his organizations. Really rich people tolerate you if they know you don't want anything from them. "You microwave that food when you get home?" I asked.

"Never be afraid of doing the tough jobs," he answered smilingly.

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

A venture capitalist and his smart wife, who's in the investment business, stopped by my table in the bar. "Any signs of life in the deal department?" I asked him.

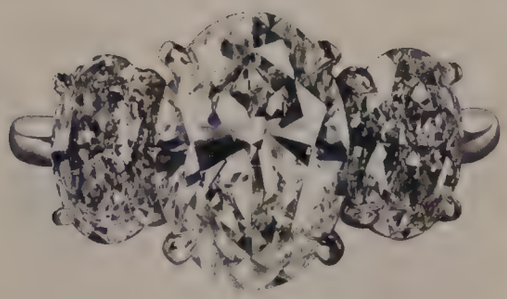
"Not too much," he said. "But the panic period is over. At least we're looking at potential areas. We're out of the storm cellar."

His wife added, "He's a worrier. I say, the financial system's been saved; let's go get 'em. Incredible opportunities in the next few years."

"Easy for her," I thought. She's lovely and smart. Tough for the rest of us.

A woman I call "Bones" wandered over. Bones was dining with her three daughters, but she sat down opposite me. "I don't know what's wrong with guys today," she said. "My girlfriends and I are great, but the male contingent is spiraling down."

"They're still confused," I said. "It's the ambiguity of roles. Can't get over that it's over for them." She laughed and patted me on the shoulder.



Three men slid into a banquette next to me. I admit it's fun to listen to other conversations. These guys were talking about local colleges, particularly their finances. "Look at Harvard," one of them said. "Their endowment is in the tank. Remember: In life arrogance eventually gets punished. Hubris is all over the place."

"How about Brandeis and the Rose Art Museum fiasco?" another man said. The first guy answered, "Champagne taste on a beer budget." Most people gossip about other people. But gossip about institutions can be fun, too.

Although the Toscano club has many delightful characters, casual advice is sometimes best ignored. One corporate officer complained to me about the price of his stock awhile ago. "It's a $50 stock," he said, "selling at $30." I watched it for some time as it sunk to below $10, remembering a certain rule of life: "Don't take things too seriously after someone's had a few cocktails." This applies to money matters as well as romance.

That night, it wasn't just me wandering around the restaurant as if it were my own living room—other diners were doing the same: stopping at the priest's table, the fund manager's table; greeting old classmates, new neighbors, real estate developers, regulars at the bar. You could get appointments with doctors from the neighborhood: heart surgeons, neurologists, shrinks, internists, ophthalmologists. The Toscano club is probably the best nightly cocktail party in the city, where, if you know your characters, you could build your own team. Those folks are key to your personal life: players in law, medicine and money matters. You want to join the club? Just make a reservation. It's like a cruise ship where you won't get seasick. Try the vitello tonnato and don't be shy with the conversation. ✖✖✖

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON PLAYOFFS, PENNY, MAYO AND MOSS

5 PIECES TO THE PLAYOFF RUN

(BECAUSE ALTHOUGH IT'S NOT OFFICIAL, THE RANGERS ARE TOAST.)

The Lineup When the postseason starts, figuring out the batting order becomes simple, because Jason Varitek simply can't be involved. Yeah, I know, poor Tek. But there's no way you really believe he should play. Plus, Victor Martinez was the everyday catcher on the 2007 Indians team that was one JD Drew homer removed from making the World Series. I'm guessing he can handle Josh Beckett.

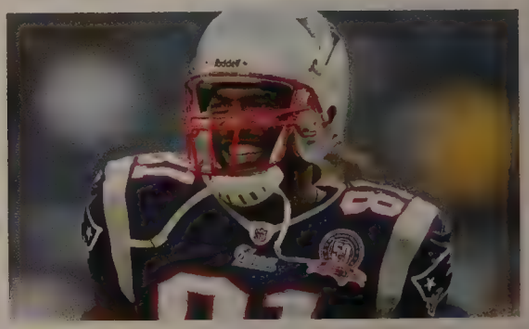
The Starters Last issue, I bought a seat (no bitch!) on the "Buchholtz for No. 3 Starter" bandwagon, but then again, that was before the improbable re-emergence of Daisuke Matsuzaka. Now, you've got to wonder: After all the fences that have been mended this season, might the Sox fear the emotional repercussions of snubbing their hundred-million-dollar man?

The Bullpen I like a playoff bullpen I can set my diamond-encrusted Rolex to. You know, an everyday closer; an everyday set-up man; one or two guys to fill the seventh. But unfortunately for the Sox, their ideal set-up man—Billy Wagner—can't throw every day. This leaves them with the hope that postseason virgin Daniel Bard is, in the immortal words of the noble T.I., "ready for whatevah."

The Defense Honestly, I'm just using this as another excuse to gush over Alex Gonzalez. Can we please talk about how great this guy is? Or how about that he's almost hitting .300? That's like finding 12 McNuggets in your McDonald's 10-piece.

The Manager But in the end, it all comes down to Tito. In no other sport is a coach's postseason performance more scrutinized and second-guessed than in baseball, and over the next month, Francona will have many an opportunity to make or break the team's chances at a third World Series title. Although the use of the word "third" here should tell you a little something about his chances.

1 ONE REASON TO ROOT FOR THE SF GIANTS



I know it's a long shot, but how twisted is the prospect of John Smoltz and Brad Penny facing off in the NLDS? Here's the only thing that could top it: Mikki Moore and Patrick O'Bryant jumping center in the NBA Finals, as MJ Carr and Rick Pitino pace their respective sidelines.

2 VOICEMAILS TO THE SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

(NOT TO BE OUTDONE BY REX RYAN, COACH BELICHICK HITS THE PHONES TO FIRE UP THE FANS.)

First Message "Hey guys... (sigh) it's Bill. So we've got a big game coming up, you know, but that's only because they're all big. That's how this league is. Yup, same thing every week. So come cheer for us on Sunday. Although unless we execute, your screaming won't mean squat."

Next Message "Umm... hey... it's Bill again. Listen, I don't want you to get the wrong idea with that 'rah-rah' message I just left. My emotions got the best of me. To be clear: There's absolutely nothing special about Sunday's game. Still, come if you want, though. We've got a Skipjack's here now."

3 Early Pats Returns

Not Again! If I was ever going to take something positive from all the pain and suffering (I'm talking about me here) that stemmed from Tom Brady's torn ACL, it was that maybe, just maybe, it had numbed me to the agony of any future "significant" injuries. But after watching Jerod Mayo go down in Week 1, it's official: Suprisingly, nothing positive will ever come from Brady's torn ACL.

Don't Be Fooled Sure, Richard Seymour looks pretty good out there in Oakland—very good, almost Pro-Bowl good. But the player you see now is not the same one who would've played for New England. Remember, nothing motivates a superstar athlete like spite. Just ask MJ.

High Flyer After two-plus seasons of Randy Moss, you'd think I'd have grown accustomed to his greatness. Well, you'd be wrong. The dude can catch a simple eight-yard curl, and I'm more amazed than a pothead watching HD Discovery. He blows my mind without even trying.

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/27 It's a homecoming (of sorts) in Foxborough, as former BC quarterback Matt Ryan leads his Atlanta Falcons into the Razor. Make that "The Wall Street Journal's No. 1 Most Handsome Quarterback" Matt Ryan. It sounds worse.

9/29 Celtics training camp opens down in Newport where, in honor of Rajon Rondo, the famous mansion will be renamed the "Ankle" Breakers. (That's right, gang. He's back!)

10/1 The Bruins kick off their season at home against Alexander Ovechkin and the Washington Capitals. Ovechkin's a two-time Hart Memorial Trophy winner—that's Canadian for "NHL MVP."

10/4 The Indians visit Fenway for the last game of the 2009 season. For Boston, this marks a gateway to a better tomorrow. For Cleveland, it's the knockout blow from a six-month-long morphine drip.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

"I would take some bizarre larva any day over a tired, unloved piece of fast food."

Soroff On JEFF CORWIN

The TV naturalist dishes on wriggly foodstuffs, Moroccan table manners and the cobra's appeal.

EMMY-WINNING CONSERVATIONIST, naturalist and television personality Jeff Corwin, 42, debuts his new series, Extreme Cuisine With Jeff Corwin, on the Food Network this month, showcasing exotic eats in a cultural context. Born and raised in Norwell, Corwin boasts several TV credits, including The Jeff Corwin Experience and Giant Monsters for Animal Planet, Going Wild With Jeff Corwin for Disney, Jeff Corwin Unleashed for NBC and Planet in Peril, which he cocreated with Anderson Cooper, for CNN. Corwin's book Living on the Edge is now in its fifth edition, while his new book, 100 Heartbeats, will be published in November. In 2002, he established Eco-Zone, an interactive museum and environmental education center in Norwell. When not traveling the globe, he lives on an island off the coast of Massachusetts with his wife, Natasha, and their two daughters.

Jonathan Soroff: Is there one thing you would never eat?

Jeff Corwin: Yeah. It has nothing to do with how it tastes, because I don't judge food by our cultural biases, but I will not eat anything that is produced in a manner that's detrimental ecologically, or that I don't think is sustainable, or [that] is inhumanely harvested. I approach the series with an open mind and an open mouth.

Any food allergies?
I don't think so. I've eaten things that probably weren't wise for my virgin stomach, but I find alcohol fixes a lot of problems.

Grossest thing you ever ate?
I was stuck at an airport and starving, and someone passed me a fast-food burger that had probably sat on the counter for as long as I'd been traveling. I felt like I was biting into a pork suet bird feeder—a big, gelatinous, gummy layer of fat and salt. I would take silk caterpillars or some bizarre larva any day over a tired, unloved piece of fast food.

Anything unexpected that you actually liked?
Most of what I've eaten has been wonderful. Just last week, I was with a Native American community known as the Grand Ronde. They climb their ancestral waterfalls to collect lampreys, which are these blood-sucking leech-like things, and it tasted like liver. Once you figure out what it means culturally, it tastes pretty damn good.

What country has the most unusual cooking?
Every country I visit has something surprising. Take Thailand and fish sauce. They use it in everything. They extract necrotic juice from fish that's been festering in pineapple in giant vats for a year. When you make fish sauce, you feel like you're covered in nuclear waste, but that incredibly pungent process results in something wonderful.

Most egregious cultural faux pas?
I was in Morocco, and I sat down to a bowl where everyone's right hand was going in, and I happen to be a lefty. Instinctively, I reached in with my left hand, and everyone gasped. The left hand is not for eating. It's for wiping yourself when you go to the bathroom.

Are you a good cook?
I'd like to think so. I love to cook. One of my greatest joys is knowing I can go out in my backyard and catch a striped bass, or harvest some clams. That feeling of "I got this for you" is just amazing.

Ever tried durian [a malodorous exotic fruit]?
I hate it. I remember being in a car with durian, and my clothes smelled like it for weeks. To me, it's like taking Glade air freshener and spraying it on a marshmallow and then sticking a sardine in the middle.

If you could only have one cuisine for the rest of your life, what would it be?
Vietnamese food. I love the balance in it. A close second for me would be a good pasta with fresh seafood. But my wife makes a blueberry pie that takes my breath away.

Ever gotten food poisoning while doing the show?
I've been in these places with no running water, no soap, none of what we consider sanitary conditions, and still, I've never gotten sick.

If you could be any animal, which one and why?
I'd love to be a meerkat and hang out with them. Or actually, a king cobra. Meerkats get eaten, but nothing eats a king cobra.

Most endangered species on the planet?
I'm doing this documentary based on my book, 100 Heartbeats, which is about species that are 100 life forms away from extinction.

If you love animals so much, why aren't you a vegetarian?
Because I'm an animal. I have teeth. For me, conservation is about sustainable use of natural resources, and I look at human beings as part of the food chain. People are always calling me out on this, but ancient hominids ate other animals. It's in our genes.

What was the hardest place to film a show?
Probably the hardest physically but the best experientially was the Arctic. It's minus 60 degrees Farenheit. You talk like you're drunk. Your eyelashes look like they have stalactites on them. Your fingers turn into icicles. Your testicles are up by your kidneys. I don't care if you're wearing $2,000 worth of cold-weather gear. It's freezing.

What three things do you always bring on the road?
My Tom's of Maine super-minty toothpaste. My Crest E-Z Glide. I'm very orally fixated. And my iPod. I travel very minimally. Always with a carry-on. I bring two pairs of pants, two T-shirts, running shorts and shoes, work shoes and that's about it.

Where haven't you visited that you're dying to go?
I'd like to travel to the mountains of China to see the giant salamander before it disappears. Imagine a five-foot-long, hundred-pound salamander. That's my dream.

How many species are there left to discover?
Oh, thousands, maybe millions. Most of them are small, really tiny, but we've only identified 10 percent of the life on earth, and only 1 percent do we know beyond its scientific name and classification. ✖✖✖

In a Pickle

PRESERVING VEGETABLES FOR A MEAL INSPIRED BY HUNGRY MOTHER

By Linh Tran Brincat

PHOTOGRAPHS BY DAN WATKINS

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN THE BLUE FLAMES OF BURNING WHISKEY AND THE FRENCH CARTOUCHE, I STARTED TO PANIC.

Although it was only 10 minutes into my pickling tutorial with chef Barry Maiden of Hungry Mother in Cambridge, I already felt dread and despair. And we hadn't come to the part where I might poison people by improperly washing my vegetables and sanitizing my jars. I was in the celebrated restaurant's tiny kitchen to learn how to pickle, but I discovered that I'd also need to acquire flambéing and origami skills in order to make a Hungry Mother menu for my pickle-centric party—scheduled for three days later. Until that moment, it had seemed like a good idea, the perfect confluence of culinary desires—Maiden would teach me how to prepare a meal that would impress my cooking-club friends, none of whom had jumped on the briny bandwagon.

Pickling is a way to suspend time in a jar. But the from-scratch movement is also a natural extension of the zeitgeist responsible for farmers' markets, locally grown produce and environmentally conscious eating. It makes sense that given a seasonal surplus of, say, okra (a vegetable that's now occupying half of my fridge) you'd want to save some for the rest of the year, when Boston's nine-month winter transforms even the hardiest athletes into pale shut-ins.

That thriftiness has a strong financial component. Despite nascent signs of an economic rebound, unemployment hovers around 10 percent, not counting those who've given up on the job search altogether. "The last few years have been rough for people," says chef Michael Scelfo, 35, of Temple Bar. "Scratch-cooking is cost-effective. You pay a higher price for pre-fabricated [food]." Jarden, the company that makes Ball canning supplies, reports a 30 percent increase in sales of home-canning equipment over last year. Almost every hardware store I visited—even the dinky one on my block—had mason jars. Although it's 2009, it's hard not to see things through the blighted spectacles of 1929.

But the current scratch-cooking movement, and the subspecialty of pickling, diverges from the techniques of leaner times in one fundamental way—it looks down on both the shortcuts and flavors of yore. There's a faction of homesteaders who frown on using packaged pectin, a naturally occurring thickener. Some make their own by boiling down fruit juice, often from unripe green apples. Recipes in Eugenia Bone's Well-Preserved, a popular cookbook for the new generation of gourmet home-canners, call for fresh herbs rather than commercial pickling spices, and for vegetables that are a far cry from the ubiquitous dill cucumber—baby artichokes, cauliflower and asparagus. (For more traditional canning recipes, consult the unfortunately named Ball Blue Book Guide to Preserving, which has been around for 100 years in some form.) These might be scary times, but some people still draw a line between cooking from scratch and cooking from scraps.

BREAD-AND-BUTTER PICKLES

5 cups sliced Kirby cucumbers, washed well
1 cup salt
2 quarts water
5 cups cider vinegar
5 cups sugar
1½ cups sliced onion
2 tbsp mustard seed
2 tbsp celery seed
1 tbsp turmeric
1 tbsp coarse black pepper

Make the brine by dissolving the salt into the water and pour the mixture over the cucumbers. Cover and refrigerate overnight.

Drain the cucumbers. Bring the rest of the ingredients to a boil in a large covered pot. Turn off the heat and let the pickling liquid steep for 10 minutes.

Arrange the cucumbers in sanitized mason jars and cover with the pickling liquid. Let cool to room temperature. If you have extra pickling liquid, you can use it on other vegetables, like green tomatoes, which don't need to presoak in brine.

At this point, you can either refrigerate the jars and eat the pickles after a few days, up until 3 months, or preserve them longer. Follow the USDA's Complete Guide to Home Canning (uga.edu/nchfp/how/can_06/prep_foods.html) and process them in a canner—essentially a large pot with rack—and keep them in a cool, dry place for up to a year.

Pickling isn't a technique to try on inferior foods. As I learned from Maiden, 33, who was recently named one of the nation's best new chefs by Food & Wine, you want to start with the freshest produce and to excise any blemishes on which bacteria might thrive. You know a chef is serious about pickles when he regularly feeds them to his seven-month-old. In theory, meticulously washing and inspecting each vegetable provides an opportunity to appreciate where your sustenance comes from; in practice, it's a soul-deadening endeavor, particularly when faced with five pounds of okra. Another perception versus reality lesson: Divide a restaurant's basic recipe by half, then divide it again. Most apartment kitchens can't handle large-batch pickling, and although I was able to trade a couple of jars of okra for a $14 overdue fee at the local video store, it's probably not accepted currency anywhere but in certain parts of Cambridge.

Maiden was a generous and patient instructor, but he was essentially teaching particle physics to a remedial student—one who had to build a space ship three days later. "The power of the pickle," he explained to me as his sous chef laughed at his word choice, "[is that] the acid can balance out heavy, Southern cooking" like the bourbon-braised pork shoulder on my dinner menu. Although I had braised before, I'd never set mirepoix (a combination of onions, carrots and celery) on fire with Jack Daniels. Nor had I ever heated up enough hot oil to cause second-degree burns. But it was when he got to the pickling part that my panic level went to Defcon 1. Pickling is easy, Maiden assured me—so simple that he'd just talk me through it (not to mention, he'd already pickled every raw vegetable in his kitchen). "Ninety percent of the pickles, you heat up the brine," he explained. "Which is vinegar, water and salt."

I DISCOVERED I REALLY LIKE TO SET THINGS ON fire.

Luckily for me, I had YouTube as a resource, where I could repeatedly watch demonstrations on flambéing, cartouche-cutting and pickling, free from a sense of inadequacy. From those videos, I learned to keep a heavy lid around to smother flames in case of an emergency and not to pour the alcohol from the whiskey bottle over heat. With the false confidence bestowed by these demos, I discovered I really like to set things on fire—going a little overboard with the bourbon just so I could relight it. I also consulted the USDA's National Center for Home Food Preservation Web site (uga.edu/nchfp) to learn about proper sanitation and storage. To my relief, I wouldn't need to process my pickles in a hot water bath or pressure cooker since I'd be serving them in a few days. Just preserving them in brine and refrigerating them would be enough to prevent the social faux pas of giving everybody botulism.

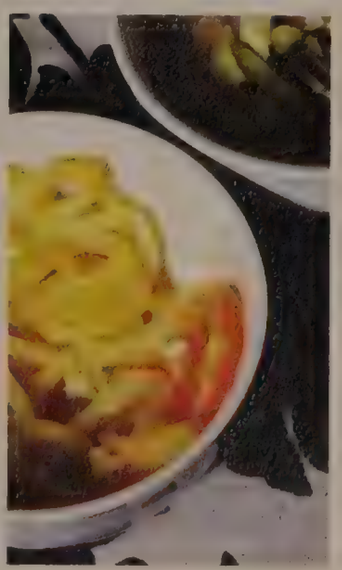
Ideally, according to Maiden, pickles are best after a couple of weeks of steeping in brine, but thanks to his recipes, mine already tasted much better than store-bought ones after only three days. They were delicious, but not enough to compensate for the weekend I spent cleaning okra, beets, green tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers in an un–air-conditioned kitchen during a hot spell. I never made the chow-chow recipe or the vegetarian surprise I promised one pescatarian guest, who was a good sport and filled up on fried pickled okra, buttery collard greens and cake. I wish I could say my cooking club left impressed. Unfortunately, most of my invitees had gone on a camping trip to Maine to take advantage of the good weather, so my elaborate, vainglorious, mistimed meal was enjoyed by a few kind souls I rounded up from the office, including one pickle fanatic who made my day when he complimented the pork and bread-and-butter pickles. I liked them, too. After braising for five hours in a 300-degree oven with fresh thyme, the pork had the consistency of meltingly tender carnitas and the mirepoix turned into sweet morsels.

And although my cooking club was a no-show, the best thing about pickles is that there's no such thing as a missed moment. I still have half a refrigerator full of them. ×××

PICKLED OKRA

- [ ] pounds okra, washed well and trimmed stem
- [ ] cloves garlic
- [ ] stalks fresh thyme
- [ ] tbsp crushed red pepper
- [ ] tbsp mustard seed
- [ ] tbsp black peppercorns
- [ ] cups white vinegar
- [ ] cups water
- [ ] tbsp salt

In a large pot, bring all the ingredients except the okra to a boil. Turn off the heat and let the pickling liquid steep for 10 minutes.



Arrange the okra in sanitized mason jars and cover with the liquid. Let cool to room temperature. See NOTE in Bread-and-Butter Pickles.

Blueprint Special

THE METHOD BEHIND STARLITE'S MENU

BY NICK ALTSCHULLER / ILLUSTRATIONS BY KATY LEMAY/AGOODSON.COM

BOARDROOM MEETINGS dish out a special kind of boredom. As if God lodged conference-table Danishes in their esophagi, the captives look desperate and dull, like fish slapping at the stern of a boat. Now resuscitate that image, transfer it to the restaurant world, and watch the color return. Replace stale bagels with bacon-wrapped meat loaf. Swap tall glasses of still water with cold bottles of Miller High Life.

A month before Trina's Starlite Lounge opens in Inman Square, the team gathers in the dining room of the Green Street Grill. On one side of the table sits Josh Childs—a 20-year industry veteran and co-owner of downtown's popular Silvertone—and Greg Reeves, Green Street's executive chef and Starlite's chef consultant. In the banquette sit chef de cuisine Suzi Maitland, managing partner J Bellao and partner/owners Beau Sturm, and his wife, the eponymous Trina. The ages range between 27 and 43, but under suntans, caps or tattoos, everyone looks at least five years younger.

The team is redrafting the menu, tweaking prices and language. Within minutes, the candlelit air is clouded with industry terms. Upsell. Piggyback. Efficiency value. Soon the meeting becomes a volley between Beau Sturm, who, fit, inked and soul-patched, gives the impression he arrived in an old Jeep Wrangler with a surfboard on top, and Reeves, who, as he holds court, looks like Dustin Pedroia with restless leg syndrome.

Burgers will come as singles, double or triples, but Sturm wants to know if their description will read beef or Angus. "Beef burgers, it doesn't really say anything," Reeves declares. "Angus, we know from the tasting, doesn't really mean anything, but it makes you feel a little better about it."

Reeves has an analytical mind. He's the type to casually drop into conversation that his drive to the restaurant was 13.8 miles. So as the issue of burger wording turns to burger pricing, he spouts: "Burgers are like $3.10 per pound. Each patty is four ounces, which means there's four patties for three bucks, so to even get a triple, you're really only getting $2.66 of meat, so even if we're losing some on a slice of American cheese, we're already killing it." Translation: a burger will cost $4.

The team makes a point of highlighting catchwords. The buffalo wings will come with "Great Hill Blue" cheese and Trina's chopped salad will be composed with "local" vegetables. Semantics are debated.

"So the salad is local veg, buttermilk dressing and boiled egg?" Sturm asks.

"Technically it's a hard-cooked egg," Reeves counters. "You ever seen an egg boil?"

Any bumps along the road are like pennies on a railway. Regarding Trina's salad, Reeves explains, "Sorry, but your name is going to be stamped on everything, get ready for it."

"I eat more burgers than I eat salads," she contends.

"Thatta girl," Childs says.

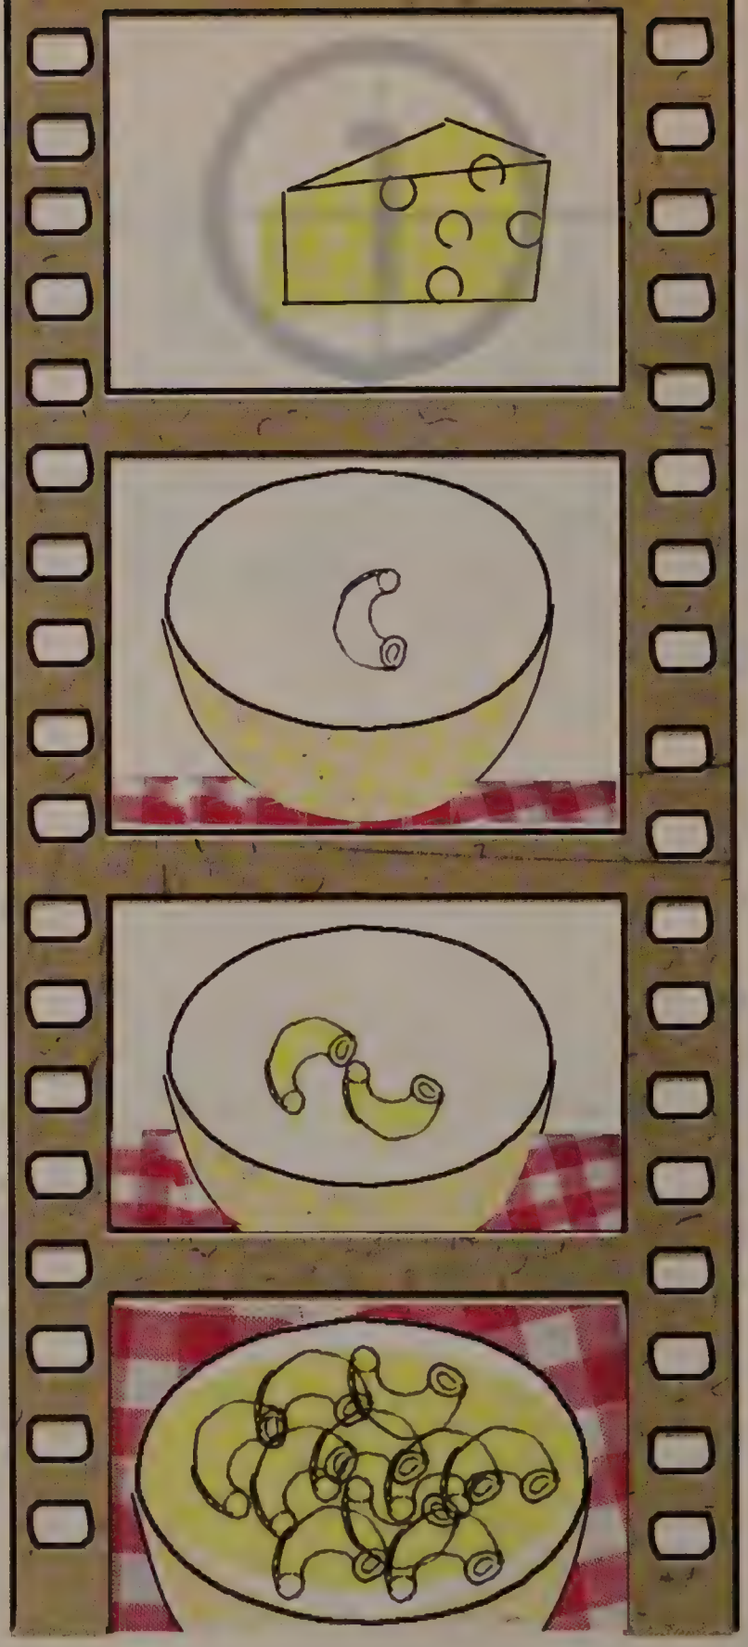
It's an hour in before the first roadblock, as Bellao interjects about the size of the sides. With a $4 side of fries, the $8 smoked turkey BLT swiftly becomes a $12 meal. With fries being dealt in big portions, how's a single diner supposed to approach his choices? Explains Bellao, "I'm trying to keep the price down and half a plate of food out of the trash."

"Well, molding a menu after a single person is not what you want to do," Reeves counters.

"I get an eight-dollar sandwich, I expect something with it. I'm talking the smallest little insubstantial pile of anything. A single French fry."

Tossed product is lost opportunity for profit. Split sizes complicate kitchen logistics. More orders require more labor to cut, brine, blanch and fry in equipment also needed for other items. Suddenly, the simple French fry has entangled the team in the web of menu planning, where plans for a $30 sack of potatoes have repercussions across the whole enterprise.

STEP 1. DRAFTING



David Shinney, owner of DCS Associates, is a hospitality and restaurant consultant with 30 years of industry experience. Based in Boston, he's worked with local restaurants and projects as far away as Miami and Prague. According to Shinney, concept is key—and should be determined before a menu gets drafted. "What are you? What are you trying to do? What's your style of operation? Every menu has to flow from the concept," he explains.

As Childs describes it, Starlite "is inspired by the '50s, but not overly reflective of them." It's the classic diner pulled into this century, a place where the bar serves pony bottles of Bud alongside the modern, crafted cocktail. As for the inclusion of Trina's name, well, the team just likes the syncopation.

First crack at the menu was given to Beau Sturm, who attacked the process with the insight of someone who's bartended since age 16 and loved the business since long before that. "When I was growing up in West Virginia, I played Pop Warner football and baseball for the Bridge Tavern," Sturm says. "The Bridge is where we went for our pizza parties afterward. The Bridge is where my dad went to drink on Tuesday nights. The Bridge is where Christenings and confirmations happened, so that would be the best-case scenario for me. That we would be the place that the neighborhood grew around."

To meet that image, Sturm's first instinct was to create a menu that he'd enjoy. He produced a voluminous list with items like the pepperoni roll, a coal-miner favorite. Thanks to a barbecue shack near his brother in South Carolina, he developed an addiction to fried chicken and waffles, and in the name of research, he visited soul-food spots throughout Harlem. The result is an anchor dish for the menu, one that's predicted to be popular, so the price can be nudged to $17 to help Starlite's margins.

With a love for eating put aside, a restaurant is a business, and food cost is the crucial statistic. A steakhouse, where the prime product doesn't come cheap, aims to spend 30 to 40 percent of monthly sales on food purchases. Starlite is aiming for around 25 percent. And on a menu where the addition or subtraction of a dollar makes a significant difference, meeting goals means balancing both perceived and actual value.

An entrée of mac 'n' cheese is a perceived value for the customer at $9. For the business, it's a mixture of inexpensive ingredients bought in bulk, meaning a healthy profit even at single-digit pricing. On the other hand, a sirloin steak ($19) will cost the customer more than twice as much, which puts more than twice as much money in the register. But with the cost of the meat, the actual profit doesn't cover much more than the price of the chef's time to cook it. The hope is to create a menu where customers are enticed to explore a variety of options, so that high and low margins are averaged to a point where the restaurant achieves a healthy percentage.

With so many logistics at play, Sturm's initial screed had to be streamlined. A dreamer's list of hot dogs, dozens of them (some topped with kimchi, others made from Kobe), was whittled down as Reeves stepped in to edit. "I was the general manager at the Metropolitan Club, and I was very involved in food costs, so I'm within 15 cents a portion just knowing offhand what we're doing," Sturm explains. "And Greg is a genius at that. Everywhere that he's been, that's been one of the things that has been embraced by the people he's worked with, that he's brought costs down by walking in the door."

STEP 2. PRODUCTION

"If you're an artist, you've got to pay for that canvas somehow," Reeves says. Before Green Street, he spent four years with Barbara Lynch as the chef de cuisine at B&G Oysters and the Butcher Shop. With his insight, B&G's kitchen knew it needed 12 gallons of mayo per week and that Pepperidge Farm only delivers if you order bread by the freighter. So it fell to him to condense Sturm's menu, where even a simple offering of three different cheeses would create a multitude of variables on the back end.

Reeves breaks it down at Green Street a couple weeks after the meeting. Filing into the restaurant behind him is a huge early evening party, sure to order dozens of different plates. "By having two less cheeses, that's two less things you have to receive, two less you have to purchase, two less things you have to inventory, two less things you have to rotate, two less things you have to have on the line, two less ingredients you have to manage in general."

Keeping the menu concise is a key to managing three components of a restaurant's operation and success. Primarily, and perhaps most obviously, the food has to taste good, as the goal is to satisfy customers. Secondly, the preparations have to be efficient. The previous French fry dilemma was solved by deciding to put out coleslaw with every sandwich order, but a consideration like hand-cut fries is a time-consuming way Starlite hopes to differentiate itself from the local bar-food competition. To balance the scales, preformed patties will be purchased, shaving away the accumulated hours it would take to form burgers by hand.

Then there is the key component of price. Each dish has a pricing formula, and while a consumer may think the two dollars made on an $8 crab cake goes right into the owner's pocket, there are expenses beyond food cost. Yes, the purveyors need payment, but so do the cooks. Then there are the direct operating expenses. Light bulbs need replacing. Walls need painting. Just delivering a bill requires a paid server, paper, ink, pens and a checkbook. At Starlite, you won't find tablecloths because one, they don't fit the concept, and two, how much leftover money do you want to spend on a linen service?

The resulting maxim for low-cost restaurants like Starlite is simple: Volume solves all. Price a griddled hot dog at $3, and people won't think twice about ordering three of them. Place snacks and sides—items with beneficial margins—in their own section on the menu, and it's a like a casino replacing cash with chips. What's another $3 order of onion rings? Live a little. And of course there's the biggest boon to the industry: booze. Explains Reeves, "People will bitch about the 12-dollar glass of wine, but no one bitches about the five-dollar Amstel."

Under the surface of the menu are cost-cutting connections like cross-utilization, where an item like black-bean chili appears not only as an appetizer but as a condiment for fries, dogs and burgers. Ideally, the customer doesn't notice these things, as the menu ultimately gets tailored down to the enticing specifics.

STEP 3. DESIGN

As a restaurant's true entry point, a menu should be clean and easy to manage. Disorder can trip up a diner's experience before the meal even begins.

"Like I went to Scampo," Reeves begins. "The food is delicious, but you read the menu and you've got some things in bold, they use some funny words, and they use no words sometimes, like lobster pizza, and another pizza has 17 things on it.

"Or you ever eaten at Pigalle? Whenever I read the menu, I'm like, nothing really looks that good to me. And I get my food, and I'm like f, this shit's the bomb."

Starlite's menu is aimed at the classic business practice of under-promising and over-delivering, as a brief description like "fried chicken and buttermilk waffles, hot-pepper syrup" informs but lets the mind wander. Will there be a breast and a drumstick? A drumstick and a thigh? Bone in or bone out? And when the entire half-chicken arrives, the customers' expectations are met in a way that both surprises and satisfies their hunger.

THE END TO any great meal is a subject for debate.

As the meeting winds down, Sturm's body language deflates and in a soft, reluctant voice he brings the final point to order. "Then the last thing is the thing I don't want to talk about, but pie…."

Maitland and Trina Sturm, who worked in an East Boston bakery as 12-year-olds, are dead set on dessert. Childs, who stopped serving apple pie and ice-cream sandwiches within Silvertone's first year, is dead set against it. Points are discussed. Alternatives are presented.

"Why not put it on the menu and see how it works, and if it doesn't work then fine," Maitland suggests.

Beau Sturm counters, "Well if it works, that's my worst nightmare, 'cause now I'm not getting my turns."

In Shinney's view as a consultant, "It is part of a meal, and people, even though we're somewhere in a recession, still order sweets." And it's not like giving it away for free was ever a consideration. "Lotta margin in dessert. If that's going to greatly impact your revenue, I might not offer it, but I'd be hard-pressed not to."

Although a businessman who sees success in variety and volume, Reeves seems to share Shinney's vision. Not offering pie leads to a quicker turnover, but whose to say there'll be another party at the end of the night? You could save 90 minutes for a profit of zero, or you could extend the stay of three parties, giving them more time to enjoy your hospitality, and sell $24 worth of dessert. "Maybe they buy pie and they buy that shot of Fernet, too," Reeves posits. "Now that's a very profitable piece of pie, you know?"

While Reeves sees diners indulging at the tables, Childs sees potential customers stewing by the door. "Customers always think when you're trying to move them in and out that you're trying to get as many seatings as possible to make as much profit as we can," he says later. "They say, 'Oh, you don't want me to have another drink at the table?' Well, actually, we make more money if you have another drink at the table, but I'm worried about Joe and Sarah who've been waiting an hour for dinner. I need to accommodate them, to make them happy here."

Another minor savings for a place like Starlite is that there's no need to buy a reservation book. A fine-dining establishment, meanwhile, has their turns established on paper before service even begins. They know how the evening will be paced and are only too happy to let you linger over the panna cotta trio and $30 glass of port. Now, whether the end of Starlite's bar acts as a pedestal for a spinning display case or a way station for hungry visitors will take some time to be finalized. No pie at the moment, but menus can always be changed.

"Maybe it's something we can approach later," Trina Sturm concedes. The energy at the Green Street meeting is flagging and entrées are on their way. "I'd just like to keep in the back of everybody's mind that pie is delicious and don't forget that."

Childs smirks and suggests, "Pie of the day? Twenty-five bucks." ×××

Terroiriste Demands

THE BOUQUET LIST

TERROIR, THE IDEA that environment makes the wine, is the key to understanding Burgundies. Or so says Peter Wasserman, a Burgundy expert and self-proclaimed "terroiriste" who joins chef Steven Brand at UpStairs on the Square for an evening exploring one of the world's great wine regions. Among the paired dishes are truffled quail egg toast and a 2006 Hubert Lamy La Princée Saint Aubin. A fine Santenay meets a hen-of-the-woods mushroom risotto. And a Premier Cru joins a slow-roasted lamb chop. Wasserman plumbs the secrets in each glass, proving that wine, like real estate, is all about location, location, location.

What a Diamond

Ballpark Figures

Looking to weasel your way out of a weekend of registering? Tell your spouse-to-be you've got tickets to Fenway. Technically, you're not starting your wedding planning with a lie. On Sept. 27, couples can check out the Fenway Park Bridal Festival, featuring more than 80 vendors, a seminar and a fashion show. There's also a groom's room with batting practice, Wiis and TVs to watch the game. The Sox won't be in town, but there'll be plenty of love in the park. Adriana Stimola

The Waiting Game

A plane, a phone call, a paycheck... we're all waiting for something. But could our constant glances at watches and calendars mean more than just an obsession with time and money? In Samuel Beckett's Waiting for Godot, two men loiter about, hoping for the arrival of the mysterious Godot. The Classical Theatre of Harlem gives the existential comedy a twist by relocating the setting to post-Katrina New Orleans in its production playing at the ICA Sept. 26–27. Don't wait to buy tickets.

The Baader Meinhof Complex ★★★ Director Uli Edel's adaptation of Stefan Aust's nonfiction bestseller presents an exhaustive crash course in 1970s German domestic terrorism. Cramming a decade's worth of bombings, kidnappings, hijackings, assassinations and urban machine-gun skirmishes into a breathless two and a half hours, the film plays like an epic miniseries with all the boring parts cut out. Run Lola Run hunk Moritz Bleibtreu stars as reckless urban guerilla Andreas Baader, a live-fast-die-young hedonist with a yen for Marxist dogma. The Lives of Others' Martina Gedeck plays Ulrike Meinhof, a respected journalist who ditches her bourgeois family to go underground with Baader's gang of zealots. A little too comprehensive for its own good, the movie is so packed with incident that it's hard to keep the bit players straight, but credit goes to Edel for his clear-eyed approach and for making what could have been a starchy history lesson hustle like a blockbuster action flick. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Cold Souls ★ ½ Demonstrating that not only has she seen Being John Malkovich but also that she liked it, writer/director Sophie Barthes' shamelessly derivative first feature proves that screenwriter Charlie Kaufman is a singular voice not easily imitated. In the film, the invaluable Paul Giamatti, playing himself for no discernible reason, discovers a pseudo-scientific agency that can extract and store the human soul for the dark times in your life when pesky emotions become too much of a bother. Bafflingly enough, Barthes plays this fertile concept not for farce, but as a dull, plodding thriller, complete with nasty Russian gangsters and a mournful, weary tone. The recently soul-free Giamatti performing Chekkov's Uncle Vanya in lecherous, Shatner-esque overdrive is the movie's lone comic highlight, as the rest of the picture falls victim to dreary metaphysical proclamations and labored genre mechanics. Wintry Moscow landscapes and a white retro-futuristic, Kubrickian set-design give Cold Souls a chill that not even Giamatti's trademark hemming and hawing can thaw. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

District 9 ★★★ With wit and originality to burn, writer/director Neill Blomkamp's scrappy little debut begins as a satirical mockumentary regarding a Johannesburg refugee camp full of crustacean-like aliens nicknamed "prawns." Stranded some 20 years ago when their mothership stalled out over South Africa, these ghastly-looking creatures suffer an institutionalized racism that smartly, if not subtly, skewers the country's history of apartheid. Sharlto Copley stars as a bumbling bureaucrat from a Halliburton-esque conglomerate charged with relocating the prawns to a newer yet even more dismal camp. Copley's such a hilarious, ineffectual blowhard that District 9 calls to mind the original, BBC version of The Office, except with aliens. Alas, the movie drops the documentary angle after the first act and settles into routine shoot-'em-up territory. The action is propulsive and often ghoulishly funny, but the movie deflates as it goes along. After you've watched a doomed alien race become obsessed with cat food and Nigerian prostitutes, gunfights aren't as engrossing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Extract ★★ Anyone who regularly quotes Office Space understands that writer/director Mike Judge is a poet of the mundane, uniquely attuned to the everyday banality that crushes our souls. Alas, this follow-up to his scathing 2006 satire Idiocracy is fairly lazy and uninspired. Jason Bateman stars as the put-upon owner of a Texas vanilla-extract factory who's ground down by his frigid wife (Kristen Wiig), ungrateful employees and the bad advice of his druggy bartender pal (Ben Affleck). There's also a workplace accident and the advances of a leggy conwoman (a miscast Mila Kunis) to deal with, and that's before we meet the thickheaded suburban gigolo. Using Gene Simmons as an ambulance-chasing lawyer is a stroke of demented genius, but otherwise Extract feels like Judge took three or four different screenplays and mashed them together. None of the disparate storylines converge, and the film doesn't end so much as peter out. You know you're in trouble when Ben Affleck is the best thing about a movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Steven Soderbergh turns the corporate thriller on its ear.

The Informant!
★★★½
Starring Matt Damon, Scott Bakula, and Joel McHale. Based on the book by Kurt Eichenwald. Screenplay by Scott Burns. Directed by Steven Soderbergh. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Claudette Barius

OFTEN THE LAST RESORT of lazy screenwriters, voice-over narration has become something of a pox on modern movies. The motto "show, don't tell" has been thrown out the window as omniscient narrators blather on about plot information already being conveyed visually, or characters spell out their emotions rather than expressing them.

But such is not the case with The Informant!, Steven Soderbergh's extremely funny goof on corporate thrillers that also makes a mockery of Hollywood's addiction to voice-overs. In typically subversive, Soderbergh-ian fashion, the nonstop inner monologue of Matt Damon's beleaguered whistle-blower Mark Whitacre often drowns out crucial conversations and key story points. Whitacre's ramblings do nothing to explore the picture's themes; they're just a collection of inane facts that he's entirely too pleased with himself for knowing. Not a lot of movies would allow a character this much time to muse about the mental prowess of polar bears, or what he deems an excessive number of syllables in the German word for "pen."

Loosely adapted from Kurt Eichenwald's exposé about illegal price-fixing in the corn-syrup industry, the level of seriousness with which Soderbergh and company engage the material is evident from the silly exclamation point they tagged onto the title. This is odd, because it's easy to imagine this tale played straight in other hands, or in Soderbergh's for that matter, if he felt like returning to the muckraking mode of Erin Brockovich and Traffic.

Damon's Whitacre is a dorky biochemist making an uneasy transition to boardroom politics. When some industrial sabotage that sounds suspiciously like the plot of a Michael Crichton novel attracts the attention of the FBI, our hero immediately steps into the fray, gushing with all sorts of incriminating information. Whitacre spends two-and-a-half years working undercover for the Feds, gathering evidence and surreptitiously recording secret meetings. It's the kind of stressful, high-risk operation that agents spend years training for, so imagine the toll it takes on a meek lab rat with a family history of bipolar disorder.

Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a Blake Edwards farce.

This sounds like heavy stuff, but the prolific Soderbergh, here releasing his fourth movie in the last 10 months, obviously felt like kicking back and goofing around a bit. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a Blake Edwards farce, and you'll have the vibe. Set in the 1990s but shot as if it were 1967, The Informant! radiates bright DayGlo colors, and blasts a brassy, retro score. Even the intertitles appear in giant Laugh-In fonts.

The film hinges on Damon's sublime performance. Although his comedic chops are often overlooked, there's nobody better at saying absurd things with a straight face. Here he carries himself with the supreme confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. After awhile, just looking at him—with his ridiculous mustache and ill-fitting toupee—is funny. Cooperating with a couple of understandably wary FBI agents (Scott Bakula and Joel McHale), Whitacre initially embraces his Junior G-Man status with gusto, calling himself Agent 0014, "because I'm twice as smart as 007."

He also has a slight problem telling the truth, which isn't exactly a desirable quality in an informant. The twists and turns of the film revolve around Whitacre's increasingly erratic behavior and his knack for forgetting to mention fairly important things until it's too late. Interestingly, Soderbergh has packed the supporting cast with comedians, but they're all playing straight men to Damon's blundering hero. Patton Oswalt, Allan Havey, even the Smothers Brothers drop by for bit parts, and the movie becomes a lesson in how to mine gold from exasperated reaction shots.

The Informant! obviously has something to say about corruption in big business, but Soderbergh seems to have lost interest in the soapbox filmmaking that made him a darling of the Academy. His last picture, The Girlfriend Experience, viewed the recent Wall Street meltdown through the eyes of a call girl played by a porn star. Not many would've chosen that path to create a movie about the economy, and I similarly doubt most filmmakers could find anything this funny about financial malfeasance in the lysine industry. The man is an original. ✖✖✖ director Marc Webb has no shortage of the cutesy indie quirk that usually causes this critic to retch in his popcorn bag. But a funny thing happens on the way to Juno territory, as the film keeps alternating between twee, look-at-me set pieces and lacerating truths not often depicted in romantic comedies. Joseph Gordon-Levitt falls head-over-heels for wide-eyed Zooey Deschanel, and the screenplay by Scott Neustadter and Michael Weber shuffles their ill-fated courtship into jarring, haphazardly juxtaposed days of blissful puppy love, waning interest and abject misery. It's basically He's Just Not That Into You for boys—with half of the running time spent warning you about the dangers of over-idealizing your object of desire, and the other half settling for banal, sitcommy tropes like the wise-beyond-her-years kid sister. It's a shame the movie keeps sheepishly backing away from its sharpest insights. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Funny People ★★★ Rambling and self indulgent, super-producer Judd Apatow's third directorial effort finds the auteur of today's man-child comedy craze struggling mightily with his growing pains. An awkward though endlessly fascinating film, Funny People is the kind of deeply personal project you can only get away with once you've already banked a billion for your home studio. Adam Sandler turns in a self-lacerating performance as a sell-out star content to sleep with groupies and turn out crap flicks until diagnosed with a potentially fatal blood disease. Alone and miserable, he adopts Seth Rogen's struggling stand-up as a gag-writing lackey and torments the young comic while attempting to repair his own life before it's too late. It's a deeply hostile, uncomfortable picture that exposes the raw, competitive nerves that drive many comedians to ruin. Like most Apatow flicks, it's poorly directed and at least a half hour too long, but Funny People proves itself to be brave and uncompromising. (In the suburbs.)

G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra ★ ½ As far as mega-budget blockbusters based on 1980s' toys and cartoons go, director Stephen Sommers' G.I. Joe is a slightly more pleasurable experience than Transformers 2. But then again, so is a colonoscopy. Sommers is the attention-addled auteur who brought you Van Helsing, and as usual, he seems incapable of helming any interaction that doesn't involve at least three swooping crane moves and a background littered with flying digital crap. Whether the Joes are in power-suits ripped off from Iron Man, or feuding ninjas are soaring though the air clashing swords, the laws of physics don't apply. As none of the objects on-screen appear to weigh very much, the incoherent destruction turns tedious quite quickly. An explosion that flattens Paris becomes such an absurd spectacle, with so many demolished cars, colliding trains and prominent landmarks laid to waste, it feels like a live-action remake of Team America, but without the jokes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

suburb of Haddonfield for a couple of provocative, if pointless, remakes. The location doesn't suit him. Zombie's 2007 take on Carpenter's original landmark at least offered the twist of a tragic backstory for mass-murderer Michael Myers, but the Haverhill native has so much sympathy for his devils that he can't quite resign himself to slasher structure. A loose collection of disconnected set-pieces, culminating in a one-year-later do-over of the previous picture, this sequel has style to burn and nowhere to go. Zombie's distinctive flourishes are banished to the margins, with weirdo cameos (Howard Hesseman, Margot Kidder, Weird Al!) and some crazed dream sequences offering hints of a creativity otherwise hamstrung by convention. Time for another original, Rob. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover ★★★ This summer's out-of-nowhere blockbuster boasts a can't-miss premise: after a bachelor party gone wrong, three addled buddies wake up to a sea of Las Vegas sleaze, with no idea what happened to the groom. A bleary-eyed detective story follows, as these staggering malcontents attempt to piece together the previous evening. Director Todd Phillips, who helmed the similar man-child favorite Old School, still hasn't mastered the pacing required for such screwball comedy, but his cast comes to the rescue. The Office's Ed Helms once again uses his outward dorkiness to conceal a deep-seated anger, and star Bradley Cooper can't help but bring an unpleasant aggression to a character presumably intended to be much more endearing. The off-kilter energy is hammered home by alt-comedy icon Zach Galifianakis, who steals every scene not nailed down with his deadpan, wildly inappropriate reactions and perverted asides. The movie isn't always as funny as it likes to think it is, but this trio makes it feel dangerous. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potterverse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hurt Locker ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow delivers an exercise in pure craftsmanship, and perhaps, not coincidentally, the first Iraq War movie worth a damn. This pulse-pounding excursion to the front lines eschews political hand-wringing or sermonizing in favor of following an explosive disposal crew, dismantling deathtraps with a surfeit of rotten luck and sick gallows humor. Jeremy Renner delivers a ferocious, star-making performance as Staff Sergeant James, an adrenaline junkie so heroically spectacular at his job, it hardly matters that the rest of his life is a disaster. A succession of jaw-dropping suspense set-pieces, the first hour of The Hurt Locker initially stakes a claim as one of the greatest war movies ever made. Eventually it settles for merely being one of the best films of the year, as Bigelow and screenwriter Mark Boal take a detour to probe James' peculiar psychopathology, with results that are rewarding, though less visceral in their impact. It's a cruel, bitter and brilliantly assembled picture. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

In the Loop ★★★ ½ In director Armando Iannucci's scabrous Iraq War satire, a misfit band of lackeys bump up against heavyweight players on the eve of the invasion—a delicate time in which even an inconsequential sound bite can blossom into a media phenomenon. Supremely savvy in regard to the power of words within our media, In the Loop drops a numbskull British Cabinet member (Tom Hollander) into the weeds of an international debate, with his every vacuous utterance spun and repurposed by forces on both sides of the argument. Peter Capaldi's shadowy political fixer fulminates with exquisitely potty-mouthed rage, eventually meeting his match in James Gandolfini's Colin Powell clone. The two square off in an aria of schoolyard insults so epic I actually applauded. Visually inert but aurally astounding, the movie plays recent tragedy for cynical farce. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Inglourious Basterds ★★ ½ Quentin Tarantino's WWII fairy tale showcases sophisticated filmmaking in the service of juvenile ideas. Continuing his sad retreat away from human experience and into the junk-culture recycling bin, Tarantino riffs on old war movies with blithe amorality, lurching across Nazi-occupied France for a silly, alternate history in which cinema itself can win wars. Time and again, characters are rescued from harm by their encyclopedic knowledge of Leni Riefenstahl flicks or the work of GW Pabst. Even flammable nitrate film becomes a powerful weapon against the Reich. It's an adorable, if childish notion. Tarantino pairs a couple of brilliantly suspenseful dialogue sequences with far too many dumb gross-outs that indulge an unfortunate performance from Brad Pitt as the scalp-happy, half-Apache commander of a badass Jewish platoon. Tarantino rewrites history for a rah-rah ending that could only happen in the movies, and while it's fun (if way overlong), what's the point? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It Might Get Loud ★★ ½ In what should've been catnip for rock 'n' roll aficionados, Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page, U2's the Edge and young whippersnapper Jack White all get together to jam on a few tunes while talking shop about the electric guitar. Too bad director Davis Guggenheim keeps getting in their way. Overedited into a flurry of disconnected, showboating tangents, the movie sabotages itself at every turn. Guggenheim doesn't seem to trust his material, constantly cutting away to goofy, literal interpretations of the musicians' ethereal musings. For example, he indulges White's worst affectations, filming the idiosyncratic front man in the company of an identically dressed mini-me. (It's supposed to be White's younger self, I think.) The music is predictably glorious, even when Guggenheim annoyingly cuts the songs short. Still, there's no beating a scene of Page playing his beloved 45 of Link Wray's "Rumble" and breaking down the song while rocking out on air guitar with the giddy enthusiasm of a teenager. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded rom-com writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely

9 ★ ½ Expanded from his 2005 Academy Award–nominated short film, Shane Acker's computer-animated tale of rag dolls suffering post-apocalyptic depression probably played like gangbusters back when it was 11-minutes-long. At 79-minutes-long, it feels like an endurance test. We're trapped in a gloomy, rusted future where humanity has once again been wiped out by the machines we created. All that remains of civilization are nine burlap dolls with big eyes and distracting celebrity voices. In essentially the same scene played in a loop, Elijah Wood's brave Number 9 bickers with Christopher Plummer's crusty, old Number One over rescuing somebody or exploring some place. Then come the killer robots. Wash, rinse, repeat. It's a heavy, joyless exercise with little variation in tone. Even Acker's initially striking animation grows deadening, as it's all gray skies, grinding gears and lumbering death machines. This is the kiddie-flick cousin of Terminator: Salvation, which is not a compliment. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Public Enemies ★★★★ Form becomes content in Michael Mann's audacious take on the final days of John Dillinger, a bank-robbing cowboy adrift in a modern world. Johnny Depp tones down his usual theatrics to play the master thief as a man just out of prison who's living for no future or no past, just an extremely precarious present. Shooting in trembling, hi-def digital video with mostly handheld cameras, Mann upends the traditional grammar of a gangster period piece and avoids the expected establishing shots of lavish 1930s art decoration in favor of nerve-jangling close-ups and experimental editing techniques. The deliberately alienating style doesn't just mirror the immediacy of Dillinger's moment-to-moment existence, it also makes explicit his bafflement at this shimmering new landscape, where both J. Edgar Hoover's Bureau of Investigation and Frank Nitti's mafia goons employ technological wonders that render an old-school desperado like our hero obsolete. Love it or hate it, Mann's technique is some sort of breakthrough. (In the suburbs.)

Taking Woodstock ★ ½ Here we go again. In case you weren't burned out by all the baby boomer navel-gazing that accompanied Woodstock's 40th anniversary, director Ang Lee and his regular screenwriter James Schamus have concocted a toothless checklist of sanctimonious '60s clichés. Based on a memoir by Elliot Tiber, Taking Woodstock heads behind the scenes, illustrating at great length how a dull young man (Demetri Martin) brought a hundred-thousand hippies to Max Yasgur's farm and wound up orchestrating his own personal liberation, or something like that. From Crouching Tiger to Brokeback Mountain, the best Lee films are tragic tales of repression. He has no idea how to handle free love, so he settles for sanitized retreads like groovy acid trips, morally bankrupt authority figures and vapid flower-power lectures. Nothing in the film feels genuine or even true to the period, and Eric Gautier's cinematography suffers from a squeaky-clean sheen. We get it, boomers: you had Woodstock. We had Woodstock '99. You win. Please stop rubbing it in. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Up ★★★★ The geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios have done it again. This tall tale of an aging widower (voiced by Ed Asner) flying his house to South America with helium balloons has no right to be so emotionally powerful, but writer/director Pete Docter weighs down the bizarre flights of fancy with sharp human sadness. Somehow the movie manages to include a 13-foot female bird named Kevin, an army of talking dogs and some spectacular action sequences while never losing sight of the moving human drama. Breathtakingly animated, Up has more strange and beautiful images than can possibly be listed here, but perhaps none more so than the crumbling old home, born aloft by thousands of brilliantly colored balloons. It's a ridiculous conceit that pays off rich metaphorical dividends, as our protagonist must learn that it's time to let go. (In the suburbs.)

LIFE CHANGER

Mikel Jollett conjures nightly catharsis with the Airborne Toxic Event.

The Airborne Toxic Event plays the House of Blues on Oct. 13.

LIFTED BY THE SWELLING drama of "Sometime Around Midnight," the Airborne Toxic Event has steadily hit Boston (and most everywhere else) this past year. But while the L.A. quintet returns to the House of Blues on Oct. 13, there's one dream destination deferred: Australia and New Zealand.

Singer/songwriter Mikel Jollett got bronchitis in England, forcing the band to scrap recent dates Down Under. "Doctors said, 'No way can you get on a 20-hour flight: You'll get pneumonia and be out for two months,'" Jollett says. "It really bummed us out, but we've played about 200 shows in the last year, so maybe it was just catching up with us."

Indeed, it's been a whirlwind year for the Airborne Toxic Event. "Sometime Around Midnight" became iTunes' No. 1 alternative song of 2008. TATE's eponymous debut album went from indie to major-label distribution. And audiences have flocked to see the band's charismatic stage show, iced by Boston-bred Anna Bulbrook's viola flights.

"When we started, we were like a little art project on the east side of Los Angeles," says Jollett, recuperating at home before a fall U.S. tour. "Art is all about connection and catharsis. It was a running joke that you would laugh and cry [at the shows], and I think that idea caught on."

It was only four years ago that the budding novelist went through his own cathartic sea change. His mother was diagnosed with cancer the same week that Jollett found out he had an auto-immune disease that affected his skin and hair. He also broke up with his longtime girlfriend.

"Everyone's got these [medical] things, and everyone goes through breakups," Jollett says. "The difference was, for some reason, it made me feel like the clock was ticking."

At the time, he worked as a music critic for such outlets as NPR, Filter Magazine and the Los Angeles Times, in addition to writing his first novel, about characters facing terminal illnesses. But the turn in his own physical and emotional health led Jollett to set aside his prose and pick up a guitar instead. "After a year of doing nothing but writing songs," he says, "I was like, 'I'd better start a band.'"

He met former punk drummer Daren Taylor and started banging out songs in a warehouse. They drafted bassist Noah Harmon (who holds a degree in jazz bass), the classically trained Bulbrook and Jollett's writing acquaintance Steven Chen, who was asked to play keyboards and became lead guitarist.

Mindful of Jollett's life crises that spawned the group, the Airborne Toxic Event took its name from the Don DeLillo novel White Noise, where the main character is fearful of the toxic fallout from a chemical accident. "He gets exposed to this big thing and thinks he's going to die—and he's not," Jollett says. "But the point is that he suddenly thinks that, and it changes his life."

Much of TATE's debut, recorded in a home studio, echoes the changes in the 35-year-old singer's life. "Sometime Around Midnight" builds from a whisper to a rage as he tells of seeing an old lover at a bar and watching her leave with someone else. "That all actually happened," Jollett says, noting the song is more about regret than jealousy.

"Some of the songs are definitely about the saddest days of my life, and that's real, but then it's just a role that you're playing," he says. "It's not that important that they're real or fiction. If the ideas and the emotional impact are real, that's the more important thing."

Musically, the CD reflects such influences as the Cure, the Smiths and the Velvet Underground, shifting from symphonic dynamics that suggest a streamlined Arcade Fire to guitar-driven rock more akin to the Strokes. And as catchy as the melodies can be, TATE wraps its music around Jollett's narrative flow, with scant attention to pop's verse-chorus-verse formula.

"I'm not good at writing like that," he says. "The labels that took us out [for lunch], especially early on, were very dismissive of the record and wanted us to change it."

The Airborne Toxic Event opted to release the album, as is, on indie label Majordomo. And when it's time for the next one, Jollett says he expects the same creative freedom from the group's new major-label overseers at Island Def Jam. "They see us as the little band that could." ✖✖✖

250 Hanover Street • Boston's North End

LUNCH DINNER

Bring in new business, with old world charm

When entertaining clients and colleagues, put our long tradition of classic italian dining excellence to work for you. Start the deal with antipasto. Get into the thick of it with a tender veal chop, add a kick with Bombolotti alla Buongustaia. Sweeten the deal with cannolis and you'll be shaking hands by the espresso and sambucca.

Questions about cord blood banking?

As an expectant parent, you may have heard that the stem cells found in your baby's umbilical cord blood can help treat over 80 chronic and acute diseases, and may treat many more in the future. No doubt you have a lot of questions and would like to learn more. Find answers online with NECBB or call us for more information.

At New England Cord Blood Bank, Inc. we've built a reputation as one of the most helpful resources for families considering umbilical cord blood banking. On our website you'll find a great deal of helpful information, including a video tour and family testimonials that help give you a clearer understanding of the process and benefits.

Ask about our new longer term, no-interest payment plans, which make choosing to save your baby's cord blood with us even easier.

"We're so lucky that we saved it..."

Brush With Beauty

Swan Strokes Who knew those 20-minute paddles around the Public Garden could be so wistful? French naïf artist Fabienne Delacroix uses oil-on-canvas to romanticize Boston's everyday sites. Her Beantown paintings—on display at the Axelle Fine Arts gallery—include scenes of cobblestone streets and glimpses into neighborhoods like the North End. See your hometown with fresh eyes through October.

Speak Easy

Buzzworthy We've come a long way since the bathtub-gin era, with classic cocktails almost as hip as vampires. But some counties still favor a dry town to a dry martini. Garrett Peck details it all in The Prohibition Hangover: Alcohol in America From Demon Rum to Cult Cabernet, taking you from the moonshine of yesteryear to the small batches of today. On Sept. 23 at Eastern Standard, enjoy a few old-fashioned Old-Fashioneds and an uninhibited look at history. Adriana Stimola

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Alicia Doble and Jennifer Leeds visited Matt Damon's star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. They said it was great fun, only Damon wouldn't stop apologizing for The Brothers Grimm.

On a recent trip to Aruba, Nicole Allen made a pit stop at Baby Beach. Of course, the place hasn't been the same since all those toddlers started showing up.

Shhh! Don't tell anyone, but Ledjona Klosi is about to unobtrusively pose for a picture (with a magazine!) on a public beach in Jonufer, Albania. Oh man, we hope nobody sees her.

Is it cavalier of us to assume that Virginia Congressman Tom Perriello loves reading our magazine? No, but it would make for a sufficiently corny Virginia pun.

REALITY DINING

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 55 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table—located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

SEAT OF POWER

Biking With the Obamas

So I was sitting at the place we rent on the Vineyard when Michelle Obama called to see if my friend Joan and I wanted to go for a bike ride with her and the President.

Just kidding.

Joan and I originally planned to ride to Menemsha Hills Reservation and go for a hike, and at the very last minute, I remembered to bring my camera. Good thing, too, because as soon as we left our driveway, we saw that the road to Lobsterville Beach was blocked by a flotilla of police cars and big black SUVs—meaning that the President was somewhere nearby.

Long story short: we were in exactly the right place at exactly the right time as the First Family rode past us, surrounded by a phalanx of Secret Service. First came Malia and Michelle, who gave us a fist bump in the air, then Sasha, and finally the President, who waved and offered a few pleasantries, while we clapped and cheered like 10-year-olds at a Hannah Montana concert.

The whole experience was completely surreal: Getting frisked by Secret Service agents on a stretch of road where the most activity is normally a seagull dropping clams on the pavement. Watching the President ride past with what I assume was the proverbial "football" containing the nuclear codes in an attaché case on the back of his bike. Finding out later that sharpshooters were hidden in the dunes with our heads in their crosshairs.

And of course, over the next few days, the President would receive a ration of shit from the press for riding without a helmet. But what about what he did wear—a black polo shirt and khakis with white sneakers and tube socks, and a Blackberry clipped to his belt?!?

Malia and Michelle Obama

Macy Krane at Yappy Hour at the Liberty Hotel

Moose Stebbins at Yappy Hour at the Liberty Hotel

Boomer and Tim Mauritz at Yappy Hour at the Liberty Hotel

There were plenty of Secret Service, but the fashion police took the day off.

There might've been plenty of Secret Service and state troopers around, but the fashion police obviously took the day off.

Hooch and Pooches

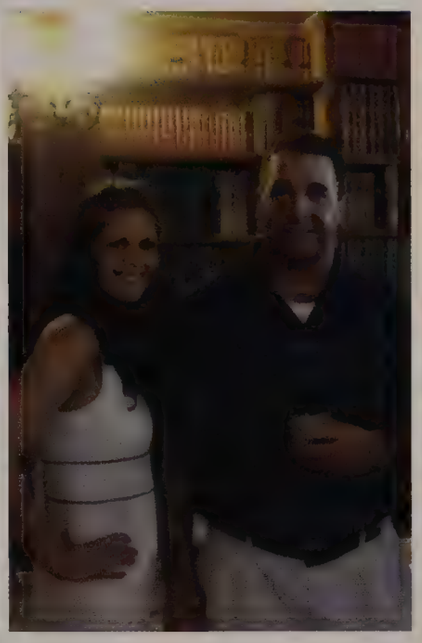
There's plenty of brownnosing at most cocktail parties but really only one where it's acceptable for guests to literally sniff each other's butts: Yappy Hour at the Liberty Hotel.

A mixer for dog owners accompanied by their pooches, the weekly evening is held in the courtyard and resembles a dog park with alcohol. There are dog biscuits on the tables and water bowls strategically deployed, and while the humans mix and mingle, their pets romp around, sometimes rambunctiously, turning the place into one large tangle of leashes.

Among the dog-lovers spotted there recently: the stunning Jessica Krane with her lab/poodle mix, Macy, doggy boutique owner Michelle Fournier and her mutt, Harry ("the rock star of Charlestown"), dog blogger Jay Stebbins of Fidoloves.com and his English pointer, Moose, Beacon Hillion Sara Townsend and her fox terrier, Miles, and law student Tim Mauritz with his bulldog, Boomer.

Although guests run the risk of a muddy paw print on their trousers or getting bowled over by a St. Bernard, one attendee did point out two of the gathering's distinct advantages:

"This is one party where you can use the word 'bitch' with impunity, and if you need to fart, you can always pin it on one of the dogs."



And as one woman explained, dogs are sometimes better company than people:

"I divorced my husband and upgraded," she said, pointing proudly at her springer spaniel. ✖✖✖

My eight-month-old son has a thing for Rihanna. More precisely, he has a thing for Rihanna singing "Umbrella." I've tried to break him of the habit, introducing Kanye West to our morning routine, but he's a one-track pony.

He probably gets it from his mother. I have a tendency to play a CD over and over again until my husband, Todd, begs me to stop—and then I bring it to work. I have a stack in my desk drawer right now that includes some sublime Rufus Wainwright.

I still want to know what's happening on the music scene but just can't find the time. Todd had to teach me about Kings of Leon. I had to teach him about Lady Gaga. What's a pair of suddenly out-of-touch parents to do?

I put my faith in music editor Paul Robicheau, whose annual list of up-and-coming bands appears in this issue. A regular at local gigs, Paul has an ear for the next big thing. The proof is in our cover: Passion Pit made the cut in 2008, and now they're rocking MTV.

I spent an afternoon listening to their hit "Sleepyhead" on repeat this time last year. But I hear their new stuff is even better.

GUITAR HERO

WHEN MICK JAGGER wanted to customize his Les Paul SG, he asked Boston guitar craftsman Peter Stokes to take the job. Stokes, 60, has worked on instruments belonging to Bob Dylan, Bonnie Raitt and other stars, but the regulars at his Broken Neck Guitar Repair store are students from Berklee, the New England Conservatory and beyond. Particularly heavy metallers. "They take a Pete Townshend approach," Stokes says. "They do a lot of power-chording." ANDREW RIMAS

Mondays are the Sabbath of the restaurant world, especially in Cambridge. But while his colleagues rest, Mark Romano cranks things up at Highland Kitchen—namely the blender, the Fryolater and the jukebox. The star of Fried and Frozen Mondays is the buttermilk-battered chicken—with garlicky mashed potatoes, wilted collards and a biscuit. And Otis Redding, crooning in the background.

Drink of the Moment

NEXT GEN

First there was absinthe, then St-Germain. Now genever has resurfaced in the ongoing release of spirits once locked away. (Get ready to drink a lot of Crème Yvette this winter.) Fifty odd years ago, genever disappeared due to Prohibition and grain shortages in Holland. Considered the forebear of gin, it's made from malt wine and botanicals. Like gin, flavors can differ according to label, but a brand like Bols has the distinctive aroma of bread soaked in grappa.

At Craigie on Main, Tom Schlesinger-Guidelli uses Bols in the Puma ($11), combining it with corn simple-syrup, Veuve du Vernay, orange bitters and lemon juice. "Because it's so foreign to us, this shows its versatility in a light, airy, slightly sweet cocktail," he says. "I believe you can take drinkers along a spectrum and hopefully bring them to being open to something new." Good practice for when the next forgotten spirit makes its grand return.

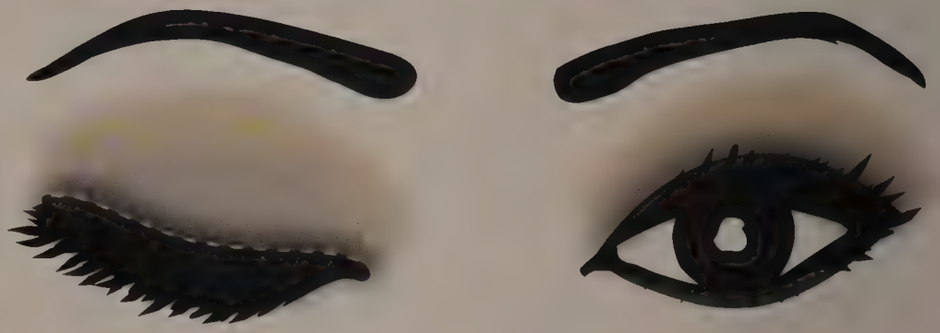
There's no word for it in English, which is good, because given drinking's current state of hipness, the term would probably be unbearably pretentious.



Myung Dong in Allston is a pojang mah-cha, or a dive bar that's been spit-shined while keeping its priorities straight. From the owners of Buk Kyong and Buk Kyong II, it offers a gregarious atmosphere, drinking snacks and melons filled with booze.

IT'S A POJAN MAH-CHA, OR A DIVE BAR THAT'S BEEN SPIT-SHINED.

"It's a place for Korean and international students—it reminds them of home," manager Jennifer Lee explains. "You won't see the cocktails we do anywhere else."

Libations to be shared around circular steel tables include makulee ($13–$22), or milky rice wine, and soju (like sake, but stronger) blended with fruit for pitchers ($17), served in a watermelon ($30), or just downed by the shot.

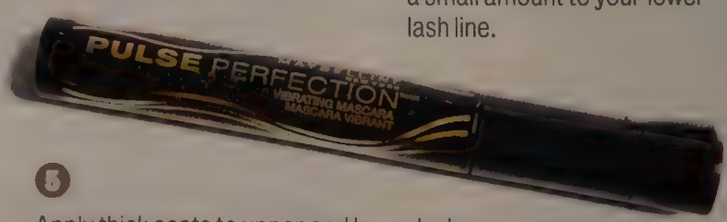
Over suksae beef bulgogi ($17.99), beef grilled on a wire rack, or spicy fishroe stew ($12.99), shot protocol may bubble up. Remember: Never pour your own, toast (gun bae!) with two hands if you're younger and hold your glass higher if you're older. Debauchery meets etiquette, another fitting concept for Bostonians. NICK ALTSCHULLER

Beauty

Starry-eyed

When it comes to shadow, forgo heavy metal. Replace glitter with shimmer, following these tips for a softer, glam approach to the rocker eye. Music knows no boundaries, but makeup does. AMANDA KNORR

1 Apply from the lash line all the way up to your brow bone.



2 Apply from the lash line to the natural crease of your eye.

3 Line your upper and lower eye as close to the lash line as possible.

4 Smudge along the lash line in upward motions and blend with the gray shadow so there's no distinct line. Apply a small amount to your lower lash line.

5 Apply thick coats to upper and lower lashes.

GET PUMPED

Nick bites into fall's favorite flavor.

THE MENU IS THE NEW FARMER'S Almanac. When crates of clementines appear, it's time to bundle up. When you're dodging yet another volley of asparagus spears, the sweaters can head for storage. Used to be, sticking a wet finger in the air would tell you how the winds were changing. Now you just have to stick out your tongue.

No flavor marks a season more than pumpkin, a squash that has squeezed its way into everything from cheesecake to cocktails. But does the taste of a filthy, rigid, warty fruit enhance these products? It was time to gorge.

My first stop was Starbucks for a pumpkin-spice latte, an endeavor that was doomed from the start. I drink coffee like a masochist, with each sip delivering a delicious jolt of pain and the chance to dirty-talk my java under my breath. Lattes are usually tepid, and while the pumpkin flavor in this one started sweet, there was an oddly salty finish. As one coworker remarked, "That would stay with me all day, in a bad way."

If I was going to regret drinking something, it might as well get me drunk. So I moved on to beer, perhaps the most popular and heterogeneous sector of pumpkin-flavored products. My friends Chris and SooAe—who've embraced adulthood more openly than the rest of my maturity-challenged pals—had thrown a pumpkin-themed dinner party. I didn't attend, but the following morning I leapt out of my racecar bed to help them finish the booze.

We began with seven different beers, an array of glasses and one snooty observation: There's no pumpkin in the bouquet. Chris decided Fisherman's Pumpkin Stout has the aroma of coffee milk. Huffing the Weyerbacher Imperial Pumpkin Ale, SooAe decreed, "This smells like Crabtree & Evelyn."

The reasoning is the seasoning, and when picking a pumpkin beer, what you should look for isn't accuracy in flavor, but ingredients that best match your preference in pumpkin pie. If you like brown sugar, allspice, cinnamon and nutmeg, try Dogfish Head Punkin Ale. If you abhor flavor of any kind, try Blue Moon's Harvest Moon. But congrats to Shipyard's Pumpkinhead, this year's winner of the Best Seasonal Vehicle for Inebriation Award.

Testing my pie theory, I went to Toscanini's, where, due to pumpkin's popularity, the flavor had sold out. "I'm obsessed with it," said Alicia, behind the counter. "Fall and pumpkin go hand-in-hand."

"But what we really want is pumpkin pie, right?"

She answered with an immediate, almost conspiratorial "yes."

The girl at Lyndell's Bakery was equally obsessed with their equally sold-out pumpkin cupcakes. "Last night, people were buying them four at a time," she explained, as her enthusiasm for their quality quickly clouded her acumen for salesmanship. "Because they're like the pumpkin muffins at Dunkin' Donuts. Have you had those? Oh my God, I live for them."

On a return visit, I found that while the flavor could easily be carrot cake, Lyndell's does win points for presentation, with thick orange frosting, striations of green icing and a candy stem. Much like with the beer, inaccuracy in flavor didn't hinder my guzzling.

In the end, the most faithful, and tasty, presentation was pumpkin soup from Da Vinci's, which was the one thing I ingested that contained discernible pumpkin. Roasted and seasoned with cinnamon, nutmeg and ginger, the soup also includes pancetta, allowing you to not only dust off the stock phrase "everything's better with bacon," but to raise it to previously unfathomable levels of foodie pomposity.

Pumpkin is a tricky fruit. You can't just pick one up and take a bite. But then again, you don't see rhubarb lattes around, and, unlike pumpkin, that ingredient is never going to win a pie popularity contest. Maybe it's the color; maybe it's that they make great lanterns. But I suspect we love pumpkins because they're an excellent medium for cinnamon, cloves and allspice. Just stock up the cupboard, and you'll have the flavors of fall year-round. ✖✖✖

HE'S NOT WORTHY

TO THE TALL, PRETTY BLONDE WOMAN WHO BOARDS THE COMMUTER RAIL AT MELROSE CEDAR PARK, ALWAYS FOUR STEPS BEHIND HER PARTNER:

You can only see the back of his bald head, with the sunglasses perched atop it, as he rushes to climb the steps onto the train. Has it ever occurred to you that he looks exactly like a six-year-old, oblivious to his mother trailing behind? Don't you deserve better than this jerk?

Dying to say something

To the overweight and unhygienic commuter who thought it was OK to clip her nails on the train:

The sound of clipping did not resonate well with my reading of my book, so luckily there was room for me a few rows back. I feel bad for the person who had to sit in your seat next. If they only knew that the sharp prick through their pants was a human nail, they would look twice before sitting down. So why don't you clip your nails in the privacy of your own home, and wash that rat's nest of yours while you're at it?

Disturbed commuter

To the unbelievably rude manager at the local climbing gym:

I won't be returning to your establishment. While the workout I get there might be great, nothing is worth the unpleasant atmosphere you create when you're around. The last straw was when you yelled at the young woman (in front of clients, no less!) who has graciously and pleasantly helped me several times when I've come in. Your lack of professionalism, obvious power trip and demeaning manner make me wonder how you ever weaseled your way into a leadership position in the first place. I have my suspicions…

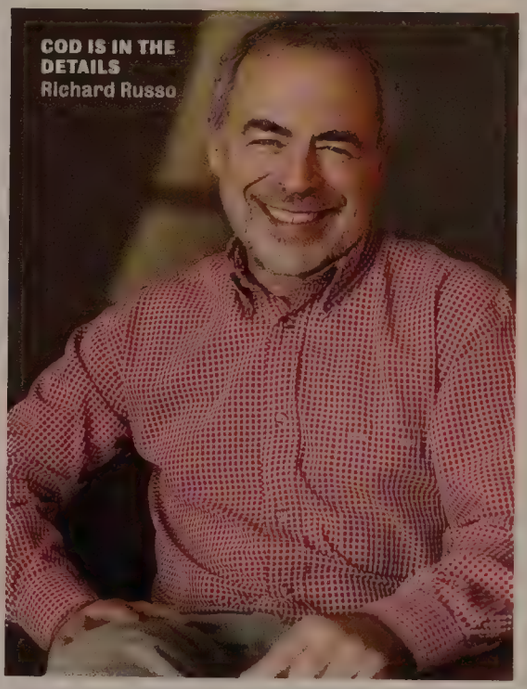
A son's professorial parents and life lessons



That Old Cape Magic
by Richard Russo

A novel about an intellectual family's relationships

IN RICHARD RUSSO'S STORY OF conflicted family legacies, Griffin's deceased parents occupy a real and metaphorical place as not-yet-scattered ashes in his car. Both snobby professors, bitter about their low-status teaching jobs and serially unfaithful, they nevertheless yearned for an imagined paradise on Cape Cod.

His mother, a Class A bitch, "talks" to Griffin in his head, criticizing everyone and everything. As a boy, he'd glommed onto the Brownings, a friendly Italian family next door, sticking a foot into their sweeter, more humane household. Continuing to define himself in contrast to his prickly parents, Griffin becomes a reasonable, loving husband, father and screenwriter. And—hey, mom and dad!—also a professor. He marries Joy, who comes from a bumbling, non-intellectual family, to his mother's cruel scorn.

But over time, we see their rather contented marriage slowly unravel as Joy falls for Griffin's screenwriting partner. Two weddings—one on the Cape, the other in Maine—emphasize the differences between the families, with Joy's bonehead-

BANQ WITHDRAWS

Ginger parks.

NOT ANOTHER CHINESE restaurant, Ginger Park—which has replaced the South End's Banq—boasts an acclaimed-in-New-York cook and a small-plates menu spanning the street-food traditions of Thailand, Malaysia and, yes, China. Executive chef Patricia Yeo, who established her Manhattan reputation at AZ, Pazo and other hot spots, says Boston offers her a better environment in which to balance her work and personal life. Yeo adds that the culinary community is "very welcoming," citing offers of help with everything from sourcing ingredients to getting pedicures.

TREND WATCH You can't throw a menu without hitting a small plate.

BON SAVOR HAS BEEN A cute corner eatery since it opened in Jamaica Plain a few years ago, but now it's positioned to become a destination restaurant, thanks to chef Marco Suarez. Formerly of Eastern Standard Kitchen, Suarez brings a new level of ambition to the menu, which still focuses on French and South American dishes, with a generous selection for vegetarians. Just about everything is house-made, from the spicy cocktail sauce for JP's first-and-only full raw bar, to the dulce de leche in the dessert crepes, to the headcheese that marks his commitment toward offering a "chef's choice" charcuterie program. Not a fusion fan, he plans to "down-size the menu a little bit, to represent both cuisines separately." Says Suarez: "I fell in love with the space, and now I'm falling back in love with my work."

WITHIN THE NEXT FEW MONTHS, expect a new restaurant to open in the space formerly occupied by Shilla in Harvard Square. "The concept is Korean steakhouse," according to landlord Raj Dhanda, featuring meats cooked right on the tabletop. The name? Not yet finalized.

THE SPICE ROUTE

Unexpected pleasures inside the revamped Tangierino

OPEN SESAME Brian Poe enjoys dishes like the za'atar-spiced rack of lamb.

IT WAS AN EVENING FULL OF contrasts. To start, I found myself in a hazy bar years after the statewide smoking ban went into effect. In a Moroccan venue surrounded by 17th-century houses and cobblestone sidewalks. With a classically trained chef who's inventing creative dishes at one of the Back Bay's busiest happy-hour joints.

Let me explain. Brian Poe, who recently took over the kitchen at the Rattlesnake Bar & Grill, joined me for dinner at the renovated Tangierino in Charlestown. After working at the Millennium Boston and spending five years at Seasons Restaurant—where he followed luminaries like Lydia Shire—Poe admitted that his initial reaction to the 'Snake's offer was "absolutely not." But with his help, the spot has embraced boundary-testing foods like Jonah crab sliders and sweetbreads.

Our destination that evening had undergone a transformation as well. Besides expanding and updating the space, Tangierino had crafted a Moroccan "chophouse" menu to showcase New and Old World flavors.

We started downstairs at Koullshi, one of the area's only cigar bars, where Poe happily smoked a cigarette. "It's a luxury nowadays, so I have to take advantage of it," he explained, sipping a Harpoon IPA (his drink of choice).

Upstairs we ran into a bartender who'd worked with Poe at Seasons. With a wink, he told us he'd bring us more drinks (I was having the Hitching Post pinot noir, $13), and we were ushered into a darkened dining room where rose petals blanketed our ornate, knee-level table. A tent of sheer curtains shielded us from the rest of the room, but we could see other patrons cozying up in similar setups.

The exotic, adventurous environment prompted a conversation about travel. Poe used a year between gigs to journey and cook through Chile, Peru and Bolivia. "I joke that I took the year off, but I was cooking the whole time and gathered a lot of ideas," he said.

Raised a "Southern Baptist boy in Georgia," Poe draws from both the South and South America, but looking over Tangierino's menu, he was eager to explore new tastes and spices.

Before taking our orders, a server appeared with a large copper bowl and a kettle of warm rose water, so that we could wash our hands. The scent lingered as we dipped into our appetizers. Sticking with a New World theme, we started with a pair of beautifully cooked, pumpkin-seed–crusted sea scallops ($15). Another plate, which equaled the scallops in ornate presentation, held a four-layer disc of tuna tartare ($16). A ubiquitous dish, this tartare stood out with a layer of honey-mango guacamole.

Poe was practically purring over the almond-crusted foie gras ($19), which sat atop a flaky, pastry-wrapped duck confit, but the blazing beef tenderloin ($15) had little more than a flicker of flame.

Soon a belly dancer appeared, tapping tiny cymbals between her fingers to the beat of the sitar-driven tunes playing overhead. "I never know what to do when they come by," Poe said laughing. "Do I tip?"

Our entrées also arrived with a flourish. Another New World selection, the four-bone za'atar-spiced rack of lamb ($33) included truffled mashed potatoes and a rosemary reduction, while a more traditional lemony chicken tagine ($24) with green olives and pommes frites capped off our feast.

Over mint tea ($7, pot) , we returned to the topic of his Peruvian adventures. "It really gave me a whole new perspective," he said. Looking around the space, he nodded, adding, "That's the beauty of trying new things, right?" ×××

Medford-born TV personality Maria Menounos came home on Sept. 12 for Hallmark Health's second annual gala and auction at the Royal Sonesta Hotel. The event was attended by 300 people and raised $100,000 for diabetes treatment and education at Hallmark's health centers, including Lawrence Memorial in Medford, where the star's father received care.

Boston Children's Theatre held an event at Nixon Peabody law firm on Sept. 26. The lawyers turned their 25th-floor boardroom and dining room into a party space for supporters of the 60-year-old charity, which provides live theater by children and for children. Some 120 people attended the event, which raised $30,000.

Perfection has its price.

Of course it tastes better than other beers. We've had over 600 years to get the recipe right. Our esteemed brewery has been producing beer in Leuven since 1366. Which means we've been around a bit longer than most. Mind you, over the years our beer has witnessed the odd change or two. For instance, our customers no longer drink it to ward off the Plague, as they used to in medieval times. However, one thing has stayed the same after all these years. Stella Artois is still painstakingly brewed in a time-honored tradition with the choicest ingredients. Which is why our customers have kept coming back for more, even after 600 years.

Always enjoy responsibly. stellaartois.com

JUST SO-SO

The latest verbal tic

THERE'S A STRANGE linguistic crutch that's sweeping the nation. It's an epidemic of epidemic proportions. I see it on TV, hear it on the street and even catch myself mindlessly stumbling into its clutches. I try to stop, but it's kinda addictive, so. So what? So I should duct-tape my mouth shut until I can complete a thought? Yes, I probably should. But everyone else is doing it, so.

What began as a way of abandoning a thought, letting one's muse trail off into the realm of infinite possibility, has become a declarative statement. There's no longer an ellipsis after the "so," as there is when Kristen Wiig's pathologically lying Saturday Night Live character uses it to one-up somebody. "So" is now a closer: "I'm busy tonight, so." (So get the hell out of my face.) Most of the time, "so" now stands in for "So that's all I have to say on this matter."

This is actually the second turn for "so" on the pop-culture merry-go-round. The last time was so not cool—don't worry, I'm so kidding. It so was. The forced, extra so was popular around the era of the dangling "with," as in, "I'm so getting in my Hummer H2 and cranking some Destiny's Child. You want to come with?" I know, so 2004.

I want to start some new trends along the lines of pig Latin.

I'm curious how these mutations begin. Did someone actually say, "You know, I'm going to start saying 'same difference' and see if that catches on"? I want to start some new trends, along the lines of pig Latin or whatever you call the way Snoop Dogg talks. Basically, you can make up any silly thing and people will latch onto it, because we're all so bored with talking.

For instance, I'd love to bring back the Prohibition-era gangster "see." So I'm going to start ending sentences with "see." And you're gonna start using it, see? Or I'm gonna get mad, see. Note: You may also have to speak with an exaggerated nasally voice, because humans didn't develop our current timbre until 1975.

How about this? We all stop using the word "the," and we end our sentences with the word "monkey." Let's try: I've got tickets to Celtics game, monkey. I might've hit nail on head with this idea, monkey!

And people better get on board, because there's nothing more embarrassing than starting a crazy fad that doesn't catch on. Like when Kris Kross started dressing totally crossed out, expecting that their hit single "Warm It Up Kris" would prompt kids nationwide to go to school with their clothes on backwards. Except nobody did, because wearing your clothes backwards is stupid. Plus, it's uncomfortable, especially the shoes.

While "so" is the fashionable verbal tic of the masses, every individual has his or her own stable of abused verbiage. I have a friend who's latched onto the word "literally." In fact, he's invented a new spin for "literally" abuse. Normally, someone will test my language-police self-restraint by saying, "I literally sweat my ass off when I run," or some other statement that is hopefully not literal. But this fellow injects "literally" into situations that are in fact literal, but unremarkable. We were driving in his car, and he said, "I literally drove up this road yesterday." Really? You mean you didn't figuratively drive up this road yesterday? You actually did that? Because without the "literally," I would've assumed you were constructing some sort of allegory, wherein "the road" is the French Revolution and "driving" represents the inherent conflict between the concepts of fate and free will. But I guess you just mean you drove your car here yesterday.

Pointless oral embellishments abound. Some people say "in other words" before there are any other words. Some people devalue "by the way" by adding its conspiratorial wink to the most straightforward and mundane statements. Obama invented a new one, the Obama pause, wherein you prevent yourself from chattering by stressing certain syllables, pausing and dragging out particular words. Annnnnnnddddd that's how you avoid sounding like Heidi Montag when you're disCUSSING... matters of national importance.

I'm not above critique, either. I've caught myself saying "clearly" a lot. And there's clearly no way to inject "clearly" into your everyday conversations without sounding like a pompous douche. I also say "like I might've told you" too often, because I can never remember what I already discussed with a particular person. Like I might've told you, I've clearly got some work to do myself. And that's my column, so. ✖✖✖

BANNER YEAR?

Why the Sox can do it again

WHAT A DIFFERENCE 10 days makes. In mid-September, the Red Sox lead in the American League Wild Card race went from two games to eight, essentially eliminating the pretenders. It gave the Sox the luxury of setting up their rotation for the postseason. If the team succeeds, that stretch will have been the defining moment.

It's a great time of year. As the leaves change colors, and the Patriots try to find themselves, the Red Sox are back in the driver's seat. They're primed and ready, just like in 2004 and 2007.

But it wasn't so long ago that they were in the trunk, wrapped in a rug. In July, they were the Dead Sox. They couldn't hit. They couldn't pitch after Josh Beckett and Jon Lester.

The Red Sox spent the dog days of summer sweating—and left a multitude of questions: Is David Ortiz finished? Is Jason Varitek done for? Where's the power? Are there too many players and not enough positions to keep everyone happy? Is there enough pitching?

That last one wasn't supposed to even be an issue in 2009. Pitching? The Red Sox had two seasons' worth.

They brought in two oldies but goodies in John Smoltz and Brad Penny, who both had major surgeries the year before. They had maybe the best three-man rotation in baseball in Beckett, Lester and Daisuke Matsuzaka, who was 18-3 in 2008. They also had a kid on the farm, Clay Buchholz, just in case.

Well, it turns out, you can never have too much pitching talent. Smoltz and Penny weren't good enough. Dice-K tanked. But, thankfully, Buchholz was on deck. And once again, the bitchers and moaners are boasting that the team can't be beat.

They have something to brag about.

The Red Sox have been bred to win in the playoffs. The problem for most of the season was getting there. Is there a team in the big leagues whose staff is better-suited for a post-season run than the Sox?

Take the ace, Beckett. His struggles in August and early September were cause for panic, with Beckett pitching himself out of the Cy Young Award. But he settled back into his throne as the Game 1 starter in a playoff series—in 2007, he was 3-0 in Game 1s. The best part of the early ending to the AL Wild Card race is that the Sox can give him some much-needed rest.

Lester also deserves applause. He has earned the right to be a part of the conversation as an ace. The big left-hander appears to be on a mission.

But, I believe, Buchholz will be the key in October. And he may be the unsung hero of the August and September run. Buchholz told us he was a major-league pitcher, and despite appearing antsy in Pawtucket earlier in the summer, he was true to his word.

The scuttlebutt on Buchholz, incidentally, was that he didn't take his craft seriously enough. He had too much fun being a major-leaguer and forgot what it took to get there.

That was then. He soon realized that major-league hitters are very good. If you don't put in the time and effort to improve, you won't make it.

Buchholz finally got it. He became the No. 3 pitcher the Sox had sought since Tim Wakefield's back started acting up at the All-Star break. The thing is, Buchholz isn't pitching like a No. 3. He's been every bit as effective as Lester and, more recently, Beckett.

It makes me wonder if the New York Yankees, baseball's best team for almost the entire 2009 season, are loaded and ready for bear like the Red Sox are. I don't think so. Their pitching, particularly their starting rotation after CC Sabathia, is bordering on messy.

Yes, I love the Red Sox' chances. And I love this time of year. ✖✖✖

ON BECKETT, VMART, C'S AND KNEES

5 ALDS STORYLINES

Closing the Deal Back on Sept. 16, the Sox lit up Angels closer Brian Fuentes for two runs in a dramatic walk-off victory, and in the process might have altered the course of the ALDS. The Sox know they can beat him now. In the playoffs, that type of confidence is worth more than John Henry. (FYI: Jonathan Papelbon has a .083 ERA in 15 career games vs. LAA.)

They Were Running The Angels finished third in the American League in stolen bases this season. Meanwhile, the Red Sox catchers are a base-stealer's wet dream. They'd have a hard time throwing out Johnny Pesky. Mismatch? Mmmyeah, especially if certain Sox starters (ahem, Dice-K) struggle with the strike zone.

The Legend of VMart I joke about his arm, but there's no denying what Victor Martinez meant to the Sox these last two months—everything. His bat ignited the lineup and his personality energized the clubhouse. But as always, that won't mean jack unless he does it in October. P.S.: I believe in you, Victor, even if Josh Beckett doesn't.

Ace in a Hole Speaking of Beckett, is there anyone with more to prove this postseason than No. 19? OK, maybe prove is a strong word. But after last year's playoff debacle, Beckett's one shoddy October away from crippling his reputation as one of baseball's most reliable postseason pitchers. Not where he wants to be heading into the final year of his contract.

Owning Anaheim The Sox are currently 9-1 against the Angels in their last 10 postseason games; they've eliminated Mike Scioscia's squad from the playoffs three times since 2004. Sure, LAA won this year's regular season series 5-4, but come Oct. 8, do you think that will really matter? Nah, me neither. Prediction: Boston in 4.

2 OLD FRIENDS IN THE MEDIA

Rodney's Rampage... Gee, you think Rodney Harrison's having trouble adjusting to life in the broadcast booth? The guy's got more angst than late-'90s Eminem. Buddy, I know you miss the competition, but you're retired now. Stop taking everything so personally.

Big Ups to Bruschi... Tedy Bruschi was hardly what I'd call a "smooth" player on the field—hard-nosed and rugged come to mind first—but smooth is the only way to describe his presence on camera. He's a natural, which leads me to believe that one of two things are on the horizon: a run for political office or an appearance on Dancing With the Stars.

4 Knees in the News

◂ Just Out of Curiosity In retrospect, how much would I have had to pay you to switch places with Jon Lester on the night of Sept. 24? Seriously, what would it take for you to willingly accept a 150 MPH line drive off the kneecap? $5,000? $1,000? Either way, give me a call. I think we can make this happen.

The Secret Surgery We'll never know exactly what went down with KG's knee. Clearly the surgery was worse than they expected, but how much worse is anybody's guess. So while it's nice to have Garnett back on the court, I think I'll save my celebration for when he's still there in April. You understand, right?

Give Tom Some Time Knowing what we do about Tom Brady, it wasn't far-fetched to believe he'd come back from his torn ACL and immediately set the league on fire. At the same time, the fact that he has "struggled" is hardly cause for concern. Give him a few more weeks (and a healthy Wes Welker), and you'll be sweating No. 12 as obsessively as ever.

Best Wishes for Walker As I type this, an MRI is pending on Bill Walker's already surgically repaired right knee. If the news is bad, it's a crushing blow for Celtics Nation. Not only is Walker one of the nicest, most genuine guys in the league, but he was also our ticket to a Tony Allen–free season. "First boarding call for the JR Giddens bandwagon..."

1 ONE NOTE ON THE RANDY MOSS SAGA

OK, let me get this straight: Some hack from CBS claims that Moss is dogging it, and we're all supposed to freak out? Really? How's that even news? Moss has been taking plays off his entire career, but until it bothers Bill Belichick, it's not going to bother me.

3 DATES TO WATCH

10/7 The C's kick off the preseason against the Rockets in Hidalgo, Texas. Houston will be without Yao Ming and Tracy McGrady, although that's no consolation for having to spend the night in Hidalgo.

10/11 The Patriots head to Denver for a date with Josh McDaniels and the Broncos. Somewhat-related, random question: Does having sex in Denver qualify you for the Mile High Club?

10/13 Celtics captain Paul Pierce turns 32. (I'll leave you to digest that for a second. Yes, he's really getting old... and, yes, you are, too.)

PASSIONATE BUNCH Ayad Al Adhamy, Jeff Apruzzese, Michael Angelakos, Nate Donmoyer and Ian Hultquist

Soroff On MICHAEL ANGELAKOS OF PASSION PIT

The lead singer for the Boston dance-pop group talks about his Abba records, hairstyles and Fleetwood Mac comparisons.

MICHAEL ANGELAKOS, lead singer and keyboard player for Passion Pit, originally formed the group in 2007 when he wrote a few songs for his girlfriend as a Valentine's Day present. Since then, the Boston-based outfit has developed a cult following. They released their debut album, Chunk of Change, in 2008, while their first full-length studio album, Manners—with members Ayad Al Adhamy on synth and samples, Jeff Apruzzese on bass, Nate Donmoyer on drums, and Ian Hultquist on keyboards and guitar—came out last May. They've opened for such bands as Death Cab for Cutie and RJD2, played at the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival and Lollapalooza, and toured both here and abroad. Angelakos, who hails from Buffalo, N.Y., graduated from Emerson College.

Jonathan Soroff: Are you the only band that started out as a Valentine's Day present?

Michael Angelakos: In a world like this, I can't see how we could possibly be the only one. Considering how it went over, I sure hope we aren't. My girlfriend liked it, for God's sake.

You still rockin' the afro?
No. It was a mop, and it was only a product of laziness and not being able to get to a salon. Finally, I had some time off, and I got it cut. My mom was like, "Thank God."

So you've abandoned the Taliban look?
[Laughs.] Yeah. We're a pretty American-looking band now.

Does being in a band really get you laid?
Absolutely not. No way.

I've always heard otherwise.
I guess that's a sign of how successful we are.

Do you try to make your music poppy and danceable?
When you write a song, you can't really have any goal in mind. You just let the song write itself. But I guess poppy and dance-y come easily to me.

Did you cry when Michael Jackson died?
Not only were we really upset, but we were in Glastonbury, and we dedicated our last song to Jarvis Cocker because he'd slagged us off in some newspaper. But people in the U.K. took it as us disrespecting Michael Jackson, because Jarvis Cocker mooned Michael Jackson at some awards ceremony. So people were like, "All Michael Jackson fans in the U.K. are upset with Passion Pit." So to clarify: I hate Jarvis Cocker, and I like Michael Jackson.

Do you think Kanye West is a jackass?
He definitely knows how to market himself. I think it's all an act. He's probably a pretty nice guy.

Favorite instrument?
Probably a Wurlitzer electric piano.

Your take on the Boston music scene?
It has so many different scenes within itself that are all very isolated and don't really cross over. There's not much cross-pollination. We never really felt like a part of anything. But I understand that there's a much stronger dance scene now, and it's improving.

Favorite local venue to play?
We really liked playing the Paradise. We played Great Scott so many times, too.

Worst local venue you ever played?
The cafe at Northeastern. It has like a Starbucks built into it. The sound was horrific. I felt like I was playing in a mall. It was definitely the most awkward gig we ever played. The people were very nice, though.

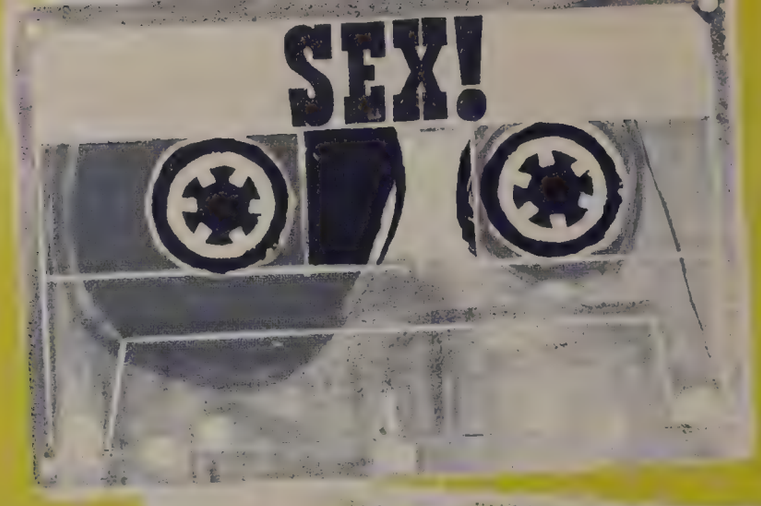
Ever write a song and then think, "Oh, I just ripped off another artist."
I think good pop music should always reference another song, or be reminiscent of something. There's always some sort of influence. But I never sat there and said, "I copied so-and-so." I've never recorded a song and then said, "Oops. That's 'Dancing in the Dark' by Bruce Springsteen."

What celebrity would you most like to play a show for?
Miley Cyrus. I'd be interested to hear what she had to say.

Favorite thing about touring?
Nothing. I hate touring. I love playing for people and connecting with an audience, but I have the patience threshold of a five-year-old when it comes to the touring part.

Where are your biggest fans?
I pray to God that they're in Japan. That's the one place I want to be well-known. Who cares about the U.S.? I want to go to Japan and have a really solid fan base. That would be so amazing.

Top three musical influences?
Definitely Paul McCartney. For the most recent album, Fleetwood Mac came through a lot. And I always say it, but I really mean it: Randy Newman as a songwriter.



Artist you most like to be compared to?
Certainly not MGMT. Not because they're not a good band or anything, but just because I don't understand it at all. When we get the Fleetwood Mac comparison, it gives me a warm feeling. But I never know how to explain our music other than "dance pop."

Do you think Justin Timberlake and Britney Spears will ever get back together?
I hope so. Just look at them. They look perfect for each other. Of course, he's so much cooler than she is, it's ridiculous. But I don't see it hurting anyone.

Any guilty musical pleasures? Abba, the Jonas Brothers...
I don't believe in guilty pleasures. Even the girl who wrote "Party in the USA" for Miley Cyrus is a really good songwriter. I absolutely love that song. And it's funny you mentioned Abba, 'cause I just bought a three-disc collection at a service station in the U.K.

Is it safe to assume that you don't think Hannah Montana deserves the death penalty?
No, I totally do! I think it's the age of Miley Cyrus now. We've moved on, and she's shedded the Hannah Montana costume.

Can I be in your next music video?
No, and I'll tell you why. I hate music videos. I absolutely hate them. I never want to make a music video again. ✖✖✖

TEN BANDS THAT ROCK

Boston music had a good year. Out of the shadows of underground open mikes and barroom stages, local groups grabbed major-label deals, racked up thousands of downloads and dueled to the top of band contests. Here are 10 artists navigating their way into the glare of the public eye. Catch them before they get overexposed.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU / ILLUSTRATIONS BY DEREK AYLWARD

She grew up on Blondie.

Life has a flip side for Sarah Guild, a massage therapist by day. "I'm moving in slow motion and being silent, and then at night, I'm bopping around and yelling," says Guild, the frontwoman for the New Collisions.

"Yelling" is too harsh a word for the classically trained vocalist's cool, effervescent delivery. The New Collisions echo new wave's early heyday, before synth-pop took over. Think Blondie or Missing Persons, visually as well as musically, thanks to Guild's stylish blonde persona.

"I've always wanted to be a frontwoman, but I never thought of myself as fitting that type," says Guild, who grew up on Blondie and Pat Benatar. "I was never the most outgoing or beautiful person, but I've sort of come into my own recently."

She and her guitarist-husband, Scott Guild, formed the New Collisions less than a year ago, plucking bassist Alex Stern and drummer Zak Kahn from the Sterns. Before finding Casey Gruttadauria to play keyboards in the style of the Cars' Greg Hawkes, they contacted Hawkes himself. He came to a show, took interest and played on Invisible Embraces, arriving on CD next month.

Liz Linder

The New Collisions also got to open for Blondie and the B-52s. "We've had our minds blown several times in the past couple of months," says Scott Guild, a published poet who balances their danceable music with lyrics about searching for meaning in today's world. "We do love how intense the lyrics are and how hooky and poppy the music is."

ARMS AND SLEEPERS

They build lush, moody soundscapes.

It's not always easy to see the members of Arms and Sleepers in the shadows onstage, but there's plenty to absorb with the eyes as well as the ears. Keyboardists/guitarists Max Lewis and Mirza Ramic, who often perform live with ex–Read Yellow drummer Paul Koelle, build lush, moody soundscapes.

"We've been very influenced by movies and visual things," Ramic says, "and working on music with that in the background. That's how we get our creative juices flowing."

Megan Schenk

He and Lewis met in high school in Lexington and played in groups while attending separate colleges. "We didn't strive to become an instrumental band, but neither one of us can sing, unfortunately," he says. In addition to film scores, they're drawn to groups like Boards of Canada and Sigur Rós, which similarly mix haunting sonics with an offbeat visual aesthetic.

Next month, Arms and Sleepers will release Matador, their first CD with some guest vocalists to lend another dreamy layer atop the trip-hop beats. Onstage, the band (whose name has a hawks-and-doves connotation) usually stick to synthesizers, guitars, laptops, live and programmed drums, glockenspiel and melodica—and films, of course.

"There's not much room for improvisation since the visuals are synched to the music," Ramic says, adding they're very conscious of playing parts live. "We give ourselves a hard time where we have to really practice to get it right."

Ryan Russell

"It's a messy, wild process."

Timothy Kyle knows what it's like for a band to click. He once moved to Montreal to play in an early incarnation of Arcade Fire. But when Kyle left for college in Santa Fe, he says, "I thought, 'Yeah, it'll be easy to find people to play with,' and there just wasn't a common language."

Luckily, Kyle got another shot—with Wild Light, the New Hampshire group he started in high school with childhood friend and guitarist Jordan Alexander, fellow bassist/keyboardist Seth Pitman and drummer Seth Kasper. Four years reunited, Wild Light launched its 2009 debut Adult Nights through major-label distribution and opened tours for Arcade Fire and the Killers.

"We get called an indie band, but I really think we're the opposite," says Kyle, citing artists like the Stones, Bob Dylan and the Clash for influencing Wild Light's strident folk-pop, where everyone but Kasper shares the vocals. "Indie music tends to be about finding the coolest niche.... Our trajectory was the reverse, to study the masters."

As for the name Wild Light, which he coined, Kyle says, "It kind of explains how our band works and how relationships work. It's a messy, wild process at times... and something seems to emerge out of it, usually against all odds."

Americana-tinged music akin to Blitzen Trapper and Bon Iver

If there's an evocative, abstract nature to Mike Fiore's lyrics, it may have its roots in his pillow. "It's like when you're falling asleep and you're thinking back on the day's conversations," Fiore says. "Everything starts swirling.... I guess that's how I think of [lyrics], chipping away at that first layer that makes sense."

The effect is heightened by the atmospheric icing of his outfit Faces on Film, which cradles Fiore's stark voice in Americana-tinged music akin to Blitzen Trapper and Bon Iver. The band includes guitarist Dave Hinckley and musicians from Hallelujah the Hills and Mr. Sister. "It's kind of whoever's around," Fiore says. "It prevents it from becoming stale. The situation lends itself to change on a nightly basis."

He and Hinckley are the only original members of Faces on Film, which they started with college friends in 2005 after graduating from Holy Cross. In addition to the group, Fiore often performs his material solo. "When I return to that," he says, "it's informed by how I play it with the guys."

Inspired by the work of Neil Young, Joanna Newsom and Tom Waits because "it's not diluted," Fiore corralled his own dark, impressionist visions on Faces on Film's 2008 CD The Troubles, recorded in less than a week. He's been slow to plan another session, although he has new songs.

"I'm almost wary to play them," Fiore says, "'cause I don't want to be sick of them by the time we record."

Faces on Film performs on Oct. 26 at the Cambridge Family YMCA Theater. myspace.com/facesonfilm

They turn quirks into tunes.

The women of Apple Betty don't go out of their way to write funny songs, like the ones about men who forget to change the toilet-paper roll or who wear sweatpants when they're aroused. "It's never an intention," guitarist Kerri-Ann Richard says of the quirks that they observe and turn into tunes. "You can't sit down and plan to write 'Sweatpant Boner.'"

Likewise, Richard says they didn't plan to launch an all-woman trio. "A huge part of it was happenstance," she says. Richard and bassist Jessica Anderson decided to start a band as DJs at UMass Lowell but didn't actually do it until a decade later, when they met drummer Caroline Toth and chose Apple Betty as a "sweet but strong" name.

Only Anderson, who brings a love of old prog-rock to Apple Betty's garage punk-pop, had prior band experience. "We wanted to have fun," Richard says. "It wasn't a matter of being too serious or making it too complicated. Most of the time I don't even know what chords I'm playing."

Her nonchalance belies the precision behind Apple Betty's bristling second CD, Streakin' 'Cross the Sky, which spans girl-group harmonies with detours into blues and country, and takes a more introspective slant on the Beatlesque "Simple Things."

"We don't want to get jaded," Richard says. "We're friends first and foremost.... That we can click and write songs and have people want to listen to them is a bonus."

HAVE NOTS

The punk tradition

The disenfranchised of the world have a voice in an upstart ska-punk band from Boston. "We're speaking for those people, not preaching about ourselves," Have Nots cofrontman Matt Pruitt says. "They're people who don't have anything, or should have more and are screwed out of what they should have."

Among those have-nots: military veterans. In "One in Four," the band rails against "survivors lost in a lost cause" when they return home. "I saw a headline in the paper that one in four homeless people are veterans," says Pruitt, who splits the songwriting with fellow singer/guitarist Jon Cauztik. "That's a staggering statistic. People preach so much that they take care of veterans, and they really don't give a shit."

Have Nots believe in punk's tradition of speaking out, he says, adding, "I have an easier time writing about things happening around me than things happening personally."

Pruitt, bassist Jameson Hollis and drummer Steve Patton came to Have Nots from the straight, fast punk group Chicago Typewriter, while Cauztik hailed from the ska-tinged Stray Bullets. And that catchy, caustic blend carried into their new band, which nods to Operation Ivy and the Clash.

Pruitt says he views Have Nots as more of a punk group, but the follow-up to the band's disc Serf City USA will feature reggae in addition to its brisker cousin ska. "Something works about ska," he says. "The vocal inflection and the way you sing over a ska beat sounds cool."

anne heaton

"I was likening your soul to the sun."

Anne Heaton turned to community service after college, working on health-care reform as a Clinton White House intern and administering a music-theater program for inner-city Chicago teens. "They'd ask me if they could pursue their dreams and I said, 'Yeah,' then realized I couldn't really say, 'Yes,' because I didn't pursue my dream," she says.

So Heaton, who studied classical piano from age 3, moved to New York, took music classes, joined a gospel choir and toured with jazz drummer Max Roach. She also honed her pop songwriting, influenced by Peter Gabriel and Indigo Girls, and recorded two lauded discs—the second, 2005's Give In, for Boston's Q Division label.

In the midst of a crumbling marriage, Heaton stopped touring full-time and relocated to Boston's supportive music scene. Now she's revved up her career behind Blazing Red, a contemplative disc anchored by her piano and vocals. "It's probably my most gentle record," Heaton says, "but it's also about making big changes in your life."

Regarding the album's title, she cites the cover art of the sun on the horizon. "You want to connect to that part of yourself that never changes, so I was likening your soul to the sun," Heaton says. "The only real way to make changes on the outside in your life is to go inward and find out what resonates."

GENE DANTE AND THE FUTURE STARLETS

Shaun Kelly

It's controlled flamboyance.

Gene Dante's claim to fame was once musical theater, with roles in a Boston production of Hedwig and the Angry Inch and a tour of Europe with The Rocky Horror Picture Show. But with his Future Starlets, which made the finals in this year's WBCN Rock 'N' Roll Rumble, Dante suggests there's a real future for his own smart, swaggering glam-rock.

"I've always felt a great concert was a theatrical event," he says. "I never saw a difference between the two, and it was easy for me to make the jump and pull back a little."

Onstage and on his new album The Romantic Lead, Dante does pull back, plying the dramatic enunciation of a leading man without taking it over the top. It's controlled flamboyance from a frontman who likes to tease—and to explore gender identity.

Backed by lead guitarist Scott Patalano, bassist Jim Collins and drummer Tamora Gooding, Dante modulates his vocals to best effect much like his influences: Neil Diamond, T. Rex's Marc Bolan and David Bowie.

"I was wowed by [Bowie's] look, but this was a guy who was crooning in the rock world instead of screaming," Dante says. "I don't want to be one of these guys who does acrobatics in their early years and can't do it anymore."

Gene Dante and the Future Starlets perform on Oct. 10 at the Middle East Upstairs. genedante.com

"We do really simple stuff."

For people who dig rock 'n' soul with old-fashioned swagger and showmanship, there's nothing like Sex! "We do really simple stuff that's emotional, nothing technical," frontman Andrew Michael Burri says. "The whole point is to connect with the crowd."

That's just what the Berklee-born quintet did this year en route to winning Rockus, a Boston-wide battle of college bands. Burri and lead guitarist Skye Handler demonstrated how physical charisma is key to the show, dropping to their knees and rolling onto their backs in the process.

Burri says he looks to Janis Joplin and Jim Morrison as his performance models, "morphing between those people because they're so uninhibited." And Handler is as obsessed with old blues icons as he is with letting it rip onstage.

Handler and guitarist Kyle Vande-Kerkhoff put the first version of the group together in late 2005 after jamming. They hooked up with drummer John Adams, who lent them a gospel and hip-hop feel, and the current lineup gelled in 2007 with the arrival of Burri and bassist Josh Hari.

As the group finishes its first CD for fall release, one sticking point is the moniker Sex! "You can't search the Internet for that band name," Burri says. "As long as we maintain the audience we've got, it shouldn't be a problem to change the name."

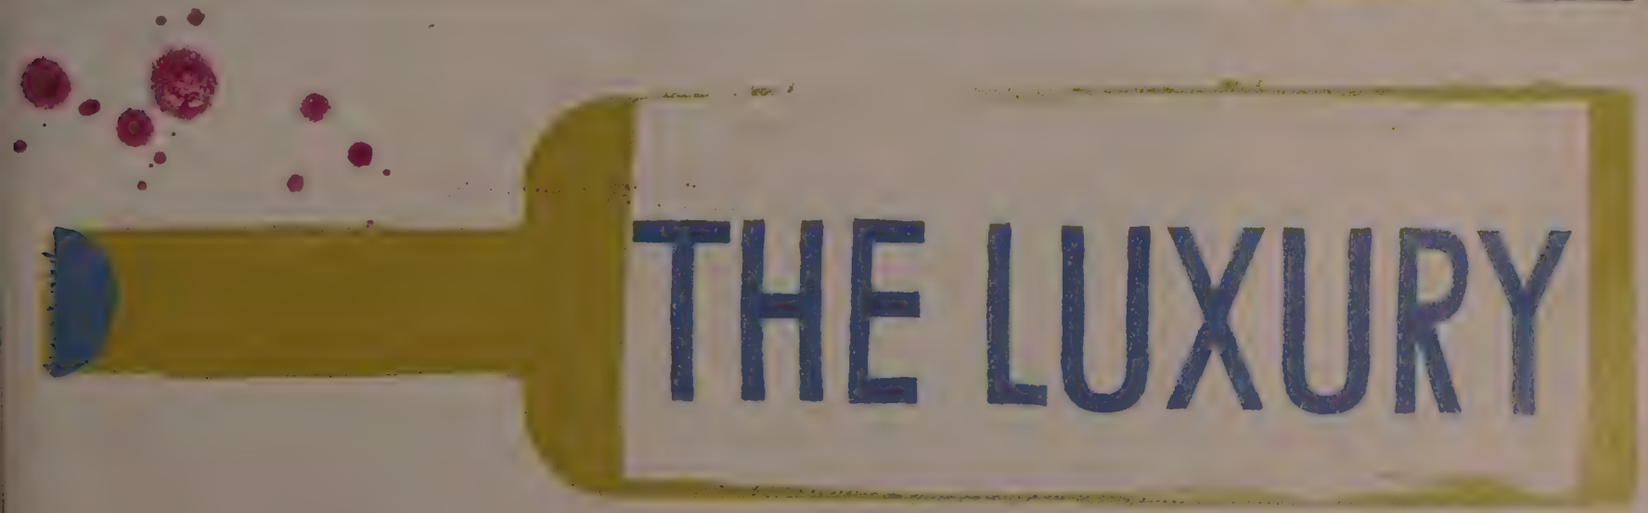
Texturally rich prog-pop

Good fortune was in the lap of the Luxury. The band won a contest to open for Coldplay last year at TD Garden. And the group captured the crown in this year's WBCN Rock 'N' Roll Rumble as a wild-card finalist.

Then things got weird. Drummer Stephen Foster scored a plum gig on a cruise ship. The group raced to record drum parts for a new CD on Rumble studio time before Foster flew to Hawaii the next day. The Luxury played several months with fill-in drummers—and a brief loss of feeling in two of singer/guitarist Jason Dunn's fingers after he pinched a nerve doing push-ups. "Luckily," he says, "muscle memory is good enough that I knew I was getting the chord forms right.

"The pendulum swung back and it swung back hard, but I'm taking it all in stride," Dunn says. "We had a great year."



Things are looking up with both his hand and Foster back in action. Now the Luxury—rounded out by guitarist Daanen Krouth, bassist Justin Day and keyboardist Steven Borek—can concentrate on promoting In the Wake of What Won't Change, its new album of texturally rich prog-pop.

"Our detractors during the Rumble said, 'They're so fancy and polished,' and this is just the kind of music we make," Dunn says. "The studio album was an opportunity to make what was already a pretty big sound as big as we could."

The Luxury performs on Oct. 11 as Duran Duran at Church. theluxuryband.com

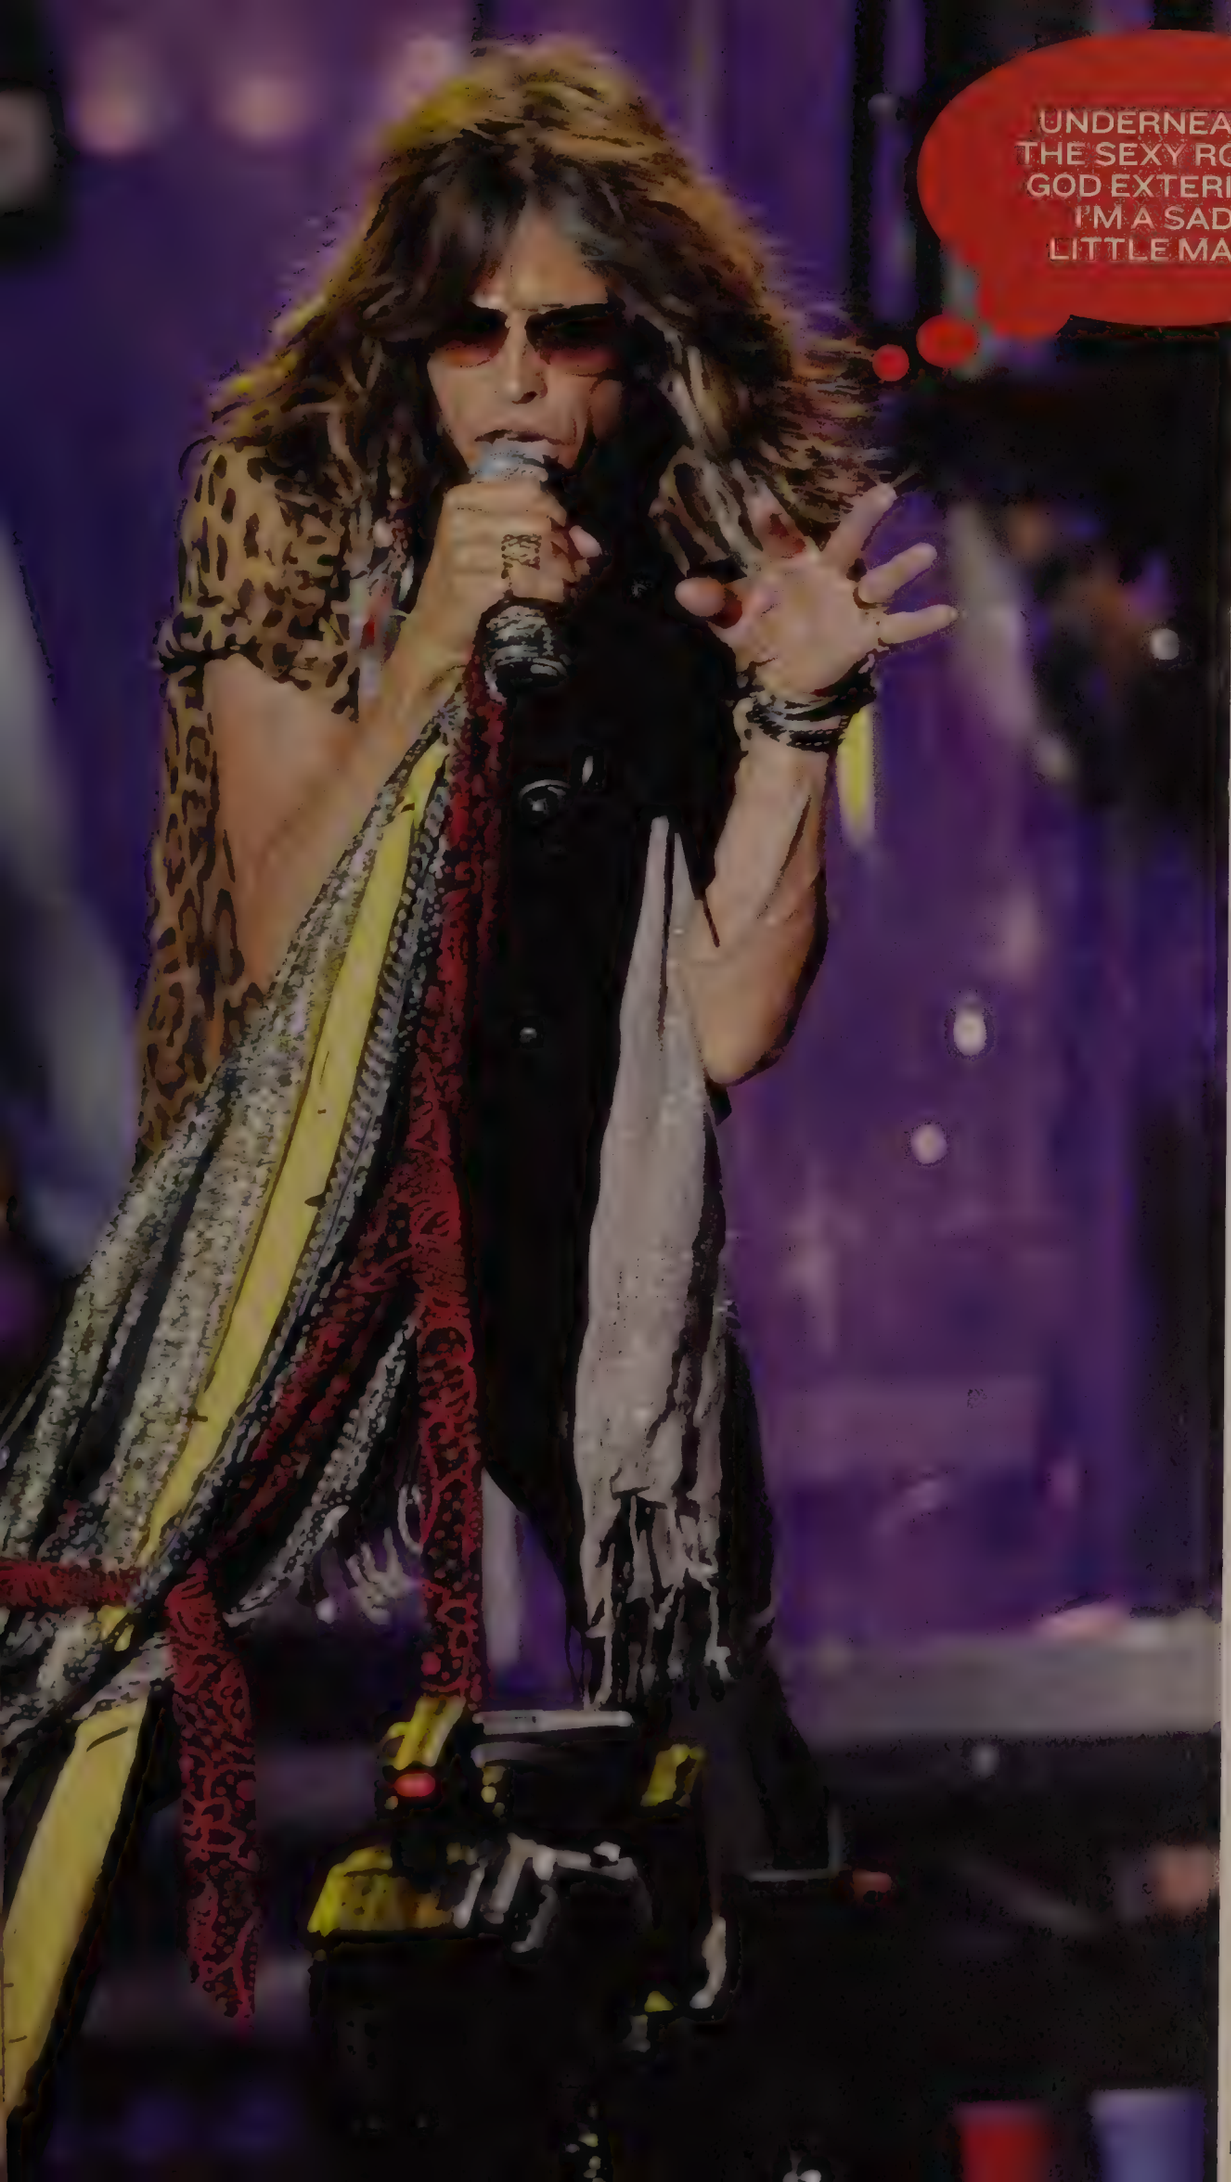
SUBTEXTUAL HEALING



ANALYZING FOUR FAMOUS SONGS

BY THAIS COLLINS

ANYONE WITHIN EARSHOT OF a radio knows Kings of Leon. The lyrics to "Sex on Fire" may have sounded a little fuzzy the first time you heard them, but a quick Web search probably cleared things up. "You, your sex is on fire." Ah, yeah.

That's the thing about pop songs. You can usually understand the words. But the meaning behind the words? Without VH1, it's like groping through radical, free-form poetry. The classics, in particular, are begging for analysis. Given that music mines subjects like lust, infidelity and unrequited love, their neuroses run deep.

How many of you have karaoke'd to "Cryin'" without paying attention to Steven Tyler's intended message? Clearly, the man's in pain. To help us dig deeper, we asked Robin Abrahams, a research psychologist and author of Miss Conduct's Mind Over Manners, to break down the choruses from four songs by Boston bands. Therapese, it seems, is a universal language.

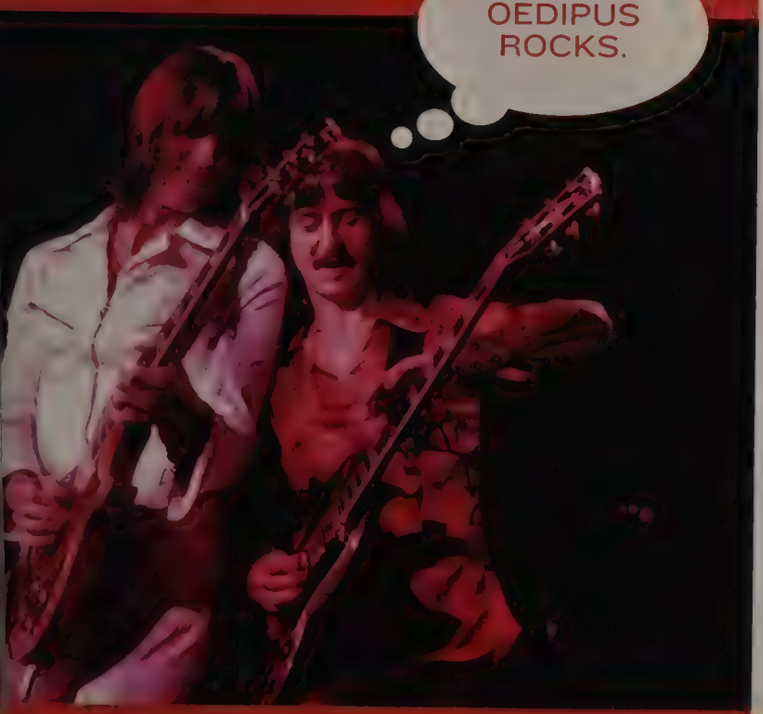
Aerosmith
"Cryin'"

I was cryin' when I met you / Now I'm tryin' to forget you / Love is sweet misery / I was cryin' just to get you / Now I'm dyin' cause I let you / Do what you do down on me

This is what it looks like when a person won't take responsibility for his or her own choices and actions. The protagonist was unhappy before he met his beloved, is unhappy with her and alludes to the fact that he would be unhappy without her, yet never appears to notice that the one common denominator in all these situations of misery (sweet or not) is himself. He needs a therapist, and not one of those unconditional-positive-regard-giving Rogerians, either. A good course of cognitive-behavioral therapy ought to help the protagonist identify his self-defeating thought and behavior patterns, and modify them appropriately. Of course, then he might not have anything to sing about, but that's his responsibility, too.

New Kids on the Block "You Got It (The Right Stuff)"

You got the right stuff, baby / Love the way you turn me on / You got the right stuff, baby / You're the reason why I sing this song / All that I needed was you / Oh girl, you're so right / And all that I wanted was you / You made all my dreams come true



The singer covers the standard tropes—the loved one as "the one," as sexually desirable, as an artistic muse. Not much new here, until we get to the final line, with that oddly doubled "You made all my dreams come true." Studies of adult development teach us that most adults, while committing to a particular way of life, nevertheless enjoy daydreaming about multiple fantasy selves, and have mutually incompatible fantasies—life as a CEO and a surfer, the security of marriage and the freedom of singlehood, etc. To avow that a single person can make all of one's dreams come true suggests not so much that the beloved possesses "the right stuff," as that the lover has an abnormally stunted imagination.

Boston

"More Than a Feeling"

It's more than a feeling / When I hear that old song they used to play / (More than a feeling) / I begin dreaming / (More than a feeling) / Till I see Marianne walk away / I see my Marianne walkin' away

Why is it "more than a feeling"? Obviously, hearing the old song "they" used to play has triggered certain nostalgic sensations. Why insist that these sensations are somehow "more than" emotion itself? There seems to be a certain self-aggrandizement to this claim. Note the regressive reference to all-powerful others (parents?), the "they" who "used to play" the song. This reference clearly exposes the childish self-aggrandizement that underlies the song. The protagonist, in the grip of an infantile egotism, is convinced that his own emotions are somehow deeper and realer than those of other people, and continues to mourn the narcissistic wound received when he was abandoned by Marianne—or was it Mommy?

The Cars
"My Best Friend's Girl"

(Here she comes again) / When she's dancing 'neath the starry sky / (Here she comes again) / Oh, she'll make you flip / (Here she comes again) / When she's dancing 'neath the starry sky / (Here she comes again) / I kinda like the way, I like the way she dips / 'Cause she's my best friend's girl / She's my best friend's girl-irl-u-irl / She used to be mine / She so, fine

I'm afraid that the situation described in this chorus contains so much potential for awkward situations that I simply have to put on my Miss Conduct hat instead of my psychologist one. By virtue of the fact that he is singing about it, we can tell the protagonist still harbors romantic feelings for his erstwhile, and now his best friend's, girl. Under these circumstances, it would be unwise for the trio to attempt to socialize as though nothing were out of the ordinary. The friendships can, ultimately, survive if everyone is willing to work to maintain appropriate boundaries. There should be no dancing 'neath the starry sky, for example, nor covert observation of same.

SHOWING PLUCK

IF A MAN WEARS many hats in life, then Steve Martin would need a walk-in closet for his eclectic collection, among them comedian, writer, director and, now, musician. His album, The Crow: New Songs for the Five-String Banjo, is a collection of original and traditionally inspired bluegrass tunes. Punctuated with foot stomps and topped with Martin's velvety vocals, it's no joke. He has as much control over clawhammer techniques as he does over Clouseauvian prattfalls.

Square Dancing

A Hornucopia Whether it's dancing in lederhosen or burning a giant wooden man, seasonal festivals have their own unique form of celebration. But no matter the party, one thing sure to fill the air (legally) is music. The fourth annual Honk! Festival features dozens of bands playing straight through Columbus Day weekend, culminating in a giant blowout concert at the Somerville Theatre. Head to Davis or Harvard squares for tunes and food. Wear suspended shorts if you so desire. But leave the lighter fluid at home. Adriana Stimola

Kick Start

It's a Hit

Though violence is never the answer, it doesn't mean you can't enjoy a good fight. The Shaolin Warriors Troupe combines meditation, self-defense and killer weapons, like the black tiger hammer, with methods dating back to 525 AD. More than 20 badass kung-fu masters show off their ancient skills with a theatrical display of combat on Oct. 16 at the Orpheum Theatre. It's the best way to experience martial arts without taking a punch.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

The Baader Meinhof Complex ★★★ Director Uli Edel's adaptation of Stefan Aust's nonfiction bestseller presents an exhaustive crash course in 1970s German domestic terrorism. Cramming a decade's worth of bombings, kidnappings, hijackings, assassinations and urban machine-gun skirmishes into a breathless two and a half hours, the film plays like an epic miniseries with all the boring parts cut out. Run Lola Run hunk Moritz Bleibtreu stars as reckless urban guerilla Andreas Baader, a live-fast-die-young hedonist with a yen for Marxist dogma. The Lives of Others' Martina Gedeck plays Ulrike Meinhof, a respected journalist who ditches her bourgeois family to go underground with Baader's gang of zealots. A little too comprehensive for its own good, the movie is so packed with incident that it's hard to keep the bit players straight, but credit goes to Edel for his clear-eyed approach and for making what could have been a starchy history lesson hustle like a blockbuster action flick. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Capitalism: A Love Story ★★ Michael Moore's latest muddled provocation feels like a flabby greatest-hits tour from a band all too aware it's become irrelevant. Moore has basically been making the same movie over and over again since his razor-sharp 1989 debut Roger & Me, and the shtick has worn awfully. Again, we've got the cheeky use of old movie footage, grossly oversimplified explanations of complex events, ironic music cues and a condescending voiceover narration. As always, Moore steps in front of the camera for a few grandstanding stunts that only end up harassing security guards and other working people he claims to champion. Taking aim at the odious financial skullduggery that capsized our economy, Moore trots out a string of disconnected outrages, extracting pathos from the victims and wagging his finger at the higher-ups. By the end, even Moore seems to have given up, admitting that he's tired of doing this and something needs to change. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

District 9 ★★★ With wit and originality to burn, writer/director Neill Blomkamp's scrappy little debut begins as a satirical mockumentary regarding a Johannesburg refugee camp full of crustacean-like aliens nicknamed "prawns." Stranded some 20 years ago when their mothership stalled out over South Africa, these ghastly-looking creatures suffer an institutionalized racism that smartly, if not subtly, skewers the country's history of apartheid. Sharlto Copley stars as a bumbling bureaucrat from a Halliburton-esque conglomerate charged with relocating the prawns to a newer yet even more dismal camp. Copley's such a hilarious, ineffectual blowhard that District 9 calls to mind the original, BBC version of The Office, except with aliens. Alas, the movie drops the documentary angle after the first act and settles into routine shoot-'em-up territory. The action is propulsive and often ghoulishly funny, but the movie deflates as it goes along. After you've watched a doomed alien race become obsessed with cat food and Nigerian prostitutes, gunfights aren't as engrossing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Extract ★★ Anyone who regularly quotes Office Space understands that writer/director Mike Judge is a poet of the mundane, uniquely attuned to the everyday banality that crushes our souls. Alas, this follow-up to his scathing 2006 satire Idiocracy is fairly lazy and uninspired. Jason Bateman stars as the put-upon owner of a Texas vanilla-extract factory who's ground down by his frigid wife (Kristen Wiig), ungrateful employees and the bad advice of his druggy bartender pal (Ben Affleck). There's also a workplace accident and the advances of a leggy conwoman (a miscast Mila Kunis) to deal with, and that's before we meet the thickheaded suburban gigolo. Using Gene Simmons as an ambulance-chasing lawyer is a stroke of demented genius, but otherwise Extract feels like Judge took three or four different screenplays and mashed them together. None of the disparate storylines converge, and the film doesn't end so much as peter out. You know you're in trouble when Ben Affleck is the best thing about a movie. (In the suburbs.)

Fame ★ ½ It's a sad sign of how dumbed down and sanitized teen movies have grown when you find yourself longing for the "gritty realism" of Alan Parker's original Fame. Parker's version may have been gaudy and overproduced in that totally '80s way, but at least it had a bit of an

NO-BRAINER

The undead rejoin pop culture's monster mash in Zombieland.

Zombieland
Starring Woody Harrelson, Jesse Eisenberg, Emma Stone, Abigail Breslin and Amber Heard. Written by Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick. Directed by Ruben Fleischer. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

ARE ZOMBIES STILL COOL, or is everyone only into vampires now?

Zombie movies flourished during the Bush era, I think, because they're easy allegories. They're simple to mold around prevailing national fears, and as theatrical devices, they're so disreputable and dismissible, directors can get away with smuggling subversive ideas into the multiplex.

The zombie renaissance kicked off in 2002 with 28 Days Later, a hyperkinetic mashup of biological terror, echoes of Sept. 11 and an overzealous military. Though the rest of the movie wasn't so hot, the opening sequence from Zack Snyder's 2004 Dawn of the Dead remake might be the best cinematic representation of Sept. 11. George Romero, who basically invented the genre with 1968's Night of the Living Dead, must've sensed what was in the air when he resurrected his franchise with the 2005 Iraq War analogue Land of the Dead, which even featured Dennis Hopper as a Dubya stand-in. Better still was Juan Carlos Fresnadillo's underrated sequel 28 Weeks Later, a film so explicitly political I'm still not sure how he got away with it.

But whenever genres come back into fashion, it's only a matter of time before the spoofs appear. Simon Pegg and Edgar Wright's Shaun of the Dead brilliantly fused hard-R horror with romantic comedy, as if a Nick Hornby adaptation took place in the background of a Romero picture. Believe it or not, last year's sly Zombie Strippers offered some potent feminist satire, along with an undead Jenna Jameson reading Nietzsche.

Ruben Fleischer's Zombieland is probably the weakest of these recent zom-coms and lacks the scares or the subtext of its brethren. But it's an enjoyable lark all the same, an amiable road movie about the importance of human connection, especially in a post-apocalyptic wasteland riddled with flesh-eating monsters.

Jesse Eisenberg stars as a dweeby, World of Warcraft–playing shut-in who survives a cannibalistic plague set off by tainted rest-stop cheeseburgers. The stammering virgin's obsessive-compulsive disorder serves him well in this decimated cityscape, where his neurotic rituals with seat belts and exercise techniques prove useful in the event of zombie attacks.

But everything changes when he meets Tallahassee, a one-man zombie-killing machine played with hammy gusto by the always-welcome Woody Harrelson. He's as reckless and gregarious as Eisenberg is vigilant and withdrawn, and the two forge an unlikely partnership with the kind of bickering chemistry that's familiar from a thousand mismatched buddy flicks.

They quickly end up losing their Escalade to a couple of savvy grifters: Superbad's beguiling Emma Stone and pint-sized Abigail Breslin. The two don't come off like the kind of kids who could outlast an apocalypse, but they talk a good game and, besides, Eisenberg is so instantly enchanted by Stone's tough-gal demeanor, it's easy to see her survival skills every time she plays him for a sucker, which turns out to be pretty often.

The screenplay, by Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick, doesn't seem interested in the usual zombie-movie metaphors, save for offering a pretty convincing rationale for their characters' chronic fear of intimacy. When a quick bite from a stranger can instantly transform a loved one into a monster, it's tough to open up and trust people. So pronounced is their aversion to attachment, the survivors initially don't even learn anyone's names, addressing each other only as their destination cities.

But no points for guessing that an unlikely family unit is still forged once these four hit the road together, as the movie has a lot more in common with Little Miss Sunshine than just Breslin. Sure, there are a few splattery set pieces, mostly involving Harrelson's eager dispatching of the undead, but they tend to feel loaned from other movies. Zombieland's surprisingly large heart lies in the banter between these lost souls, and it's a pleasure to watch them begin to let their guards down, even if it's against their better judgment.

Clocking in at a brisk 83 minutes, the movie gets its point across without wearing out its welcome. But be careful how much you read in advance, as nearly a quarter of the film is devoted to a surprising detour involving a special guest star that only a bastard would reveal.

The bullet-ridden finale takes place in an amusement park, and as much fun as it is to pretend you're watching Eisenberg's character from Adventureland returning to his old employer with a machine gun, it's not hard to shake a slight sense of zombie fatigue. As annoying as I find this recent vampire phenomenon, maybe it's time to give the walking dead a rest for a little while. ✖✖✖ edge to it. This misguided remake scrubs away all the conflicts, leaving a bland crew of students at New York City High School for the Performing Arts to negotiate their mole-hill–sized problems in some sort of sunny, alternate universe where nothing ever really seems to be at stake. The closest we get to drama is when Naturi Naughton longs to sing hip-hop, but her disapproving dad demands that she play classical piano. Allison Burnett's script skimps on scenes of actual learning and training in favor of CW storylines. Even that fiendishly catchy title song has been rendered inert, with all the zing remixed out of it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

(500) Days of Summer ★★ ½ You can tell from the title's pointless parentheses—and the fact that the female lead is indeed regrettably named Summer—that this debut from music video director Marc Webb has no shortage of the cutesy indie quirk that usually causes this critic to retch in his popcorn bag. But a funny thing happens on the way to Juno territory, as the film keeps alternating between twee, look-at-me set pieces and lacerating truths not often depicted in romantic comedies. Joseph Gordon-Levitt falls head-over-heels for wide-eyed Zooey Deschanel, and the screenplay by Scott Neustadter and Michael Weber shuffles their ill-fated courtship into jarring, haphazardly juxtaposed days of blissful puppy love, waning interest and abject misery. It's basically He's Just Not That Into You for boys—with half of the running time spent warning you about the dangers of over-idealizing your object of desire, and the other half settling for banal, sitcommy tropes like the wise-beyond-her-years kid sister. It's a shame the movie keeps sheepishly backing away from its sharpest insights. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra ★ ½ As far as mega-budget blockbusters based on 1980s' toys and cartoons go, director Stephen Sommers' G.I. Joe is a slightly more pleasurable experience than Transformers 2. But then again, so is a colonoscopy. Sommers is the attention-addled auteur who brought you Van Helsing, and as usual, he seems incapable of helming any interaction that doesn't involve at least three swooping crane moves and a background littered with flying digital crap. Whether the Joes are in power-suits ripped off from Iron Man, or feuding ninjas are soaring though the air clashing swords, the laws of physics don't apply. As none of the objects on-screen appear to weigh very much, the incoherent destruction turns tedious quite quickly. An explosion that flattens Paris becomes such an absurd spectacle, with so many demolished cars, colliding trains and prominent landmarks laid to waste, it feels like a live-action remake of Team America, but without the jokes. (In the suburbs.)

Halloween II ★★ Rocker turned rotgut auteur Rob Zombie, whose redneck phantasmagorias offer a unique voice in American horror, has inexplicably settled into John Carpenter's suburb of Haddonfield for a couple of provocative, if pointless, remakes. The location doesn't suit him. Zombie's 2007 take on Carpenter's original landmark at least offered the twist of a tragic backstory for mass-murderer Michael Myers, but the Haverhill native has so much sympathy for his devils that he can't quite resign himself to slasher structure. A loose collection of disconnected set-pieces, culminating in a one-year-later do-over of the previous picture, this sequel has style to burn and nowhere to go. Zombie's distinctive flourishes are banished to the margins, with weirdo cameos (Howard Hesseman, Margot Kidder, Weird Al!) and some crazed dream sequences offering hints of a creativity otherwise hamstrung by convention. Time for another original, Rob. (In the suburbs.)

The Hangover ★★★ This summer's out-of-nowhere blockbuster boasts a can't-miss premise: after a bachelor party gone wrong, three addled buddies wake up to a sea of Las Vegas sleaze, with no idea what happened to the groom. A bleary-eyed detective story follows, as these staggering malcontents attempt to piece together the previous evening. Director Todd Phillips, who helmed the similar man-child favorite Old School, still hasn't mastered the pacing required for such screwball comedy, but his cast comes to the rescue. The Office's Ed Helms once again uses his outward dorkiness to conceal a deep-seated anger, and star Bradley Cooper can't help but bring an unpleasant aggression to a character presumably intended to be much more endearing. The off-kilter energy is hammered home by alt-comedy icon Zach Galifianakis, who steals every scene not nailed down with his deadpan, wildly inappropriate reactions and perverted asides. The movie isn't always as funny as it likes to think it is, but this trio makes it feel dangerous. (In the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potter-verse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (In the suburbs.)

The Hurt Locker ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow delivers an exercise in pure craftsmanship, and perhaps, not coincidentally, the first Iraq War movie worth a damn. This pulse-pounding excursion to the front lines eschews political hand-wringing or sermonizing in favor of following an explosive disposal crew, dismantling deathtraps with a surfeit of rotten luck and sick gallows humor. Jeremy Renner delivers a ferocious, star-making performance as Staff Sergeant James, an adrenaline junkie so heroically spectacular at his job, it hardly matters that the rest of his life is a disaster. A succession of

Chill Out

Fair-weather Friends If you think Boston winters are a bit too frosty, Antarctica might just make you reconsider. Showing on the IMAX at the Museum of Science through Oct. 27, this 1991 documentary promises a breathtaking look at the continent many animals and a few scientists call home. While the coldest, driest and windiest place on earth flashes on-screen, feel some satisfaction: At least you have a few more weeks of sunshine before unpacking those winter coats.

Kate Vander Wiede

jaw-dropping suspense set-pieces, the first hour of The Hurt Locker initially stakes a claim as one of the greatest war movies ever made. Eventually it settles for merely being one of the best films of the year, as Bigelow and screenwriter Mark Boal take a detour to probe James' peculiar psychopathology, with results that are rewarding, though less visceral in their impact. It's a cruel, bitter and brilliantly assembled picture. (In the suburbs.)

In the Loop ★★★ ½ In director Armando Iannucci's scabrous Iraq War satire, a misfit band of lackeys bump up against heavyweight players on the eve of the invasion—a delicate time in which even an inconsequential sound bite can blossom into a media phenomenon. Supremely savvy in regard to the power of words within our media, In the Loop drops a numbskull British Cabinet member (Tom Hollander) into the weeds of an international debate, with his every vacuous utterance spun and repurposed by forces on both sides of the argument. Peter Capaldi's shadowy political fixer fulminates with exquisitely potty-mouthed rage, eventually meeting his match in James Gandolfini's Colin Powell clone. The two square off in an aria of schoolyard insults so epic I actually applauded. Visually inert but aurally astounding, the movie plays recent tragedy for cynical farce. (In the suburbs.)

The Informant! ★★★ ½ The exclamation point lets you know exactly how seriously director Steven Soderbergh is taking this true story of corporate malfeasance in the lysine industry. Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Inglourious Basterds ★★ ½ Quentin Tarantino's WWII fairy tale showcases sophisticated filmmaking in the service of juvenile ideas. Continuing his sad retreat away from human experience and into the junk-culture recycling bin, Tarantino riffs on old war movies with blithe amorality, lurching across Nazi-occupied France for a silly, alternate history in which cinema itself can win wars. Time and again, characters are rescued from harm by their encyclopedic knowledge of Leni Riefenstahl flicks or the work of GW Pabst. Even flammable nitrate film becomes a powerful weapon against the Reich. It's an adorable, if childish notion. Tarantino pairs a couple of brilliantly suspenseful dialogue sequences with far too many dumb gross-outs that indulge an unfortunate performance from Brad Pitt as the scalp-happy, half-Apache commander of a badass Jewish platoon. Tarantino rewrites history for a rah-rah ending that could only happen in the movies, and while it's fun (if way overlong), what's the point? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

It Might Get Loud ★★ ½ In what should've been catnip for rock 'n' roll aficionados, Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page, U2's the Edge and young whippersnapper Jack White all get together to jam on a few tunes while talking shop about the electric guitar. Too bad director Davis Guggenheim keeps getting in their way. Overedited into a flurry of disconnected, showboating tangents, the movie sabotages itself at every turn. Guggenheim doesn't seem to trust his material, constantly cutting away to goofy, literal interpretations of the musicians' ethereal musings. For example, he indulges White's worst affectations, filming the idiosyncratic front man in the company of an identically dressed mini-me. (It's supposed to be White's younger self, I think.) The music is predictably glorious, even when Guggenheim annoyingly cuts the songs short. Still, there's no beating a scene of Page playing his beloved 45 of Link Wray's "Rumble" and breaking down the song while rocking out on air guitar with the giddy enthusiasm of a teenager. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jennifer's Body ★ This steaming pile of snark from screenwriter Diablo Cody requires Megan Fox to actually act instead of just striking. Alas, she's not up to the task, swallowing stilted line readings as a black-hearted cheerleader transformed into a cannibalistic demon by a Satanic emo band. Mamma Mia!'s Amanda Seyfried costars as Fox's needy best friend. She also happens to be named Needy, because Cody's screenplay is that subtle. Turning Fox into a literal man-eater is a setup rife with metaphorical opportunities, not a single one of which is explored by director Karyn Kusama in this grisly, self-infatuated horror-comedy.

Instead, everyone stands around spouting Cody's insufferable blend of pop-culture references and affected hipster slang. Quips about tampons, Vagisil and "backdoor virginity" are not enough to sustain a movie, especially one so bad that even great character actor JK Simmons stinks in it. A structural disaster, Jennifer's Body can't seem to decide what it's about, who's the antagonist, or even where to end. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded rom-com writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely invites us to watch these characters discover what they do well. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

9 ★ ½ Expanded from his 2005 Academy Award–nominated short film, Shane Acker's computer-animated tale of rag dolls suffering post-apocalyptic depression probably played like gangbusters back when it was 11-minutes-long. At 79-minutes-long, it feels like an endurance test. We're trapped in a gloomy, rusted future where humanity has once again been wiped out by the machines we created. All that remains of civilization are nine burlap dolls with big eyes and distracting celebrity voices. In essentially the same scene played in a loop, Elijah Wood's brave Number 9 bickers with Christopher Plummer's crusty, old Number One over rescuing somebody or exploring some place. Then come the killer robots. Wash, rinse, repeat. It's a heavy, joyless exercise with little variation in tone. Even Acker's initially striking animation grows deadening, as it's all gray skies, grinding gears and lumbering death machines. This is the kiddie-flick cousin of Terminator: Salvation, which is not a compliment. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

French Fables

Trifle by the Eiffel

Juliette Binoche costars as the sister of a terminally ill dancer in Cédric Klapisch's Paris.

Paris ★★ Attempting to do for the City of Lights what Robert Altman did for Nashville, Cédric Klapisch presents a breezy, lightweight cityscape of shockingly little urgency, where even life-and-death matters are met with a shrug. Romain Duris stars as a dancer diagnosed with a heart disease. Despondent, he watches denizens of his beloved Paris passing by from his balcony, offering Klapisch plenty of opportunities to bunny-hop from one under-realized storyline to another. There is some fine work from Fabrice Luchini as a tweedy history professor suffering a midlife crisis and sending dirty text messages to his favorite student (Inglourious Basterds' Mélanie Laurent), and Juliette Binoche weeps elegantly as Duris' suffering sister. But Paris feels, like a lot of Altman-knockoffs, as if the writer emptied out a drawer full of half-developed ideas and hopes that juxtaposing them all in a jumble might substitute for developing just one into a full feature. (At Kendall Square.)

Taking Woodstock ★ ½ Here we go again. In case you weren't burned out by all the baby boomer navel-gazing that accompanied Woodstock's 40th anniversary, director Ang Lee and his regular screenwriter James Schamus have concocted a toothless checklist of sanctimonious '60s clichés. Based on a memoir by Elliot Tiber, Taking Woodstock heads behind the scenes, illustrating at great length how a dull young man (Demetri Martin) brought a hundred-thousand hippies to Max Yasgur's farm and wound up orchestrating his own personal liberation, or something like that. From Crouching Tiger to Brokeback Mountain, the best Lee films are tragic tales of repression. He has no idea how to handle free love, so he settles for sanitized retreads like groovy acid trips, morally bankrupt authority figures and vapid flower-power lectures. Nothing in the film feels genuine or even true to the period, and Eric Gautier's cinematography suffers from a squeaky-clean sheen. We get it, boomers: you had Woodstock. We had Woodstock '99. You win. Please stop rubbing it in. (In the suburbs.)

Up ★★★★ The geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios have done it again. This tall tale of an aging widower (voiced by Ed Asner) flying his house to South America with helium balloons has no right to be so emotionally powerful, but writer/director Pete Docter weighs down the bizarre flights of fancy with sharp human sadness. Somehow the movie manages to include a 13-foot female bird named Kevin, an army of talking dogs and some spectacular action sequences while never losing sight of the moving human drama. Breathtakingly animated, Up has more strange and beautiful images than can possibly be listed here, but perhaps none more so than the crumbling old home, born aloft by thousands of brilliantly colored balloons. It's a ridiculous conceit that pays off rich metaphorical dividends, as our protagonist must learn that it's time to let go. (In the suburbs.)

ROWDY ROOTS

John McCauley energizes Deer Tick with country-folk soul and spirit.

Deer Tick plays Harpers Ferry on Oct. 24 and Church on Nov. 8.

DEER TICK'S SONGS ARE so informed by the Providence neighborhood where frontman John McCauley III grew up, it's no wonder he named one of them "Smith Hill."

"I could drink myself to death tonight," McCauley sings in that song of romantic yearning on Deer Tick's new CD, Born on Flag Day. "Or I could stand and give a toast, to those who made it out alive. It's you I'll miss the most."

"I've seen a lot of broken families, drug addicts, hookers, all sorts of people roaming around the neighborhood, from a really young age," says McCauley, 23. "My parents did their best to shelter me from that, but it was everywhere."

His father, in fact, is a prominent local figure, a state representative since 1990. But by high school, the younger McCauley had immersed himself in sex, drugs and alcohol. "Every vice imaginable was there and at my fingertips," he says. "I dove in headfirst and made my way out of it just in time not to ruin the rest of my life."

Today, Deer Tick has fast become one of the Rhode Island capital's most ballyhooed bands with its scruffy, lyrical, country-tinged rock. Did McCauley's dad envision his son would attain some level of musical fame?

"It would be kinda hard to imagine anybody coming out of Smith Hill and becoming a well-known musician," the singer/guitarist says from a tour stop in Portland, Ore. "I see [my father] as waiting for me to get the balls to do it and prove to him that I don't have to go to college or work for the city. I don't have to do what everybody else has done."

For a time, McCauley was at home on Providence's noise-rock scene. "I wanted to play loud, aggressive music, which I still do in a way," he says. "Nirvana is one thing that will probably always stick with me. I still consider them one of my favorite bands." Then came his epiphany at age 18 with a Hank Williams Sr. album and a bottle of brandy.

"Starting with Hank Williams, I got more interested in country, folk and blues," McCauley says. "I always had a knack for words and rhyming, but I never really honed my skills and tried to stick to one subject to make a concise story."

So he hunkered down and crafted songs that would take root on Deer Tick's startling 2007 debut War Elephant. Having played bass and drums before he mastered guitar and pedal steel, McCauley tackled almost every instrument himself on the starkly poetic CD. It sounded far beyond his years and indeed suggested a cross between Hank Williams and Nirvana.

But McCauley didn't aim for Deer Tick to be a solo project. He toured with other drummers before settling on hard-hitting Dennis Ryan, who enlisted his half-brother Chris Ryan, a formally schooled musician who could write string arrangements in addition to playing acoustic and electric bass. Chris Ryan's roommate Andy Tobiassen signed on as a second guitarist. And that foursome made Born on Flag Day, a more accessible record that ranges from Dylan-esque folk to the Chuck Berry–style rave-up "Straight Into a Storm."

Deer Tick has since added guitarist Ian O'Neil, in time to play Harpers Ferry on Oct. 24 and a benefit at Church on Nov. 8. "It'll fill out our live sound and make it more true to the recordings and also add a certain element of surprise," McCauley says. "Every now and then, I get the impulse to throw my guitar down and grab the mike off the stand and run into the audience and sing."

Throughout the lineup changes, McCauley's coarse, pack-a-day voice remains the group's key element. "I'm actually not smoking as much as I used to," he says. "I can feel it limiting my voice. Every now and then, I'll go a few days without a cigarette and realize how much better I sing."

He also claims to have found "a level of responsibility and jolliness" in regard to other vices. "We have this image as big substance abusers, but most of the time I wouldn't mind being alone instead of getting plastered."

Not that McCauley likes to decline shots when they come his way. "Sometimes it's just not the right time," he offers, citing a recent show where he'd consumed a lot of whiskey and beer before he threw down a last shot and threw up.

"I don't know if that's cool or not," McCauley says. "But we kept going. We played for another hour." ×××

Rave On

There Is Nothing Like a Dane

Do you hear the sound waves, carrying 1950s pop riffs and swells of noise? The Raveonettes have come to town! Copenhagen's Sune Rose Wagner and Sharin Foo have been delivering irresistible, cinematic songs of love and violence since their 2002 debut, Whip It On, (recorded entirely in B-flat minor). Lusty and sinister as ever, their fourth album, In and Out of Control, promises more pop, while serving a healthy dose of distortion. They'll be at the Paradise Rock Club (most likely dressed in black) on Oct. 20.

ALL THAT GLITTERS

Third Time's a Charm

Diamonds are the Boys & Girls Clubs' best friend, or at least Cartier is.

The Newbury Street jeweler held a swanky cocktail reception hosted by director Cedric Tonello and Boys & Girls Clubs head honcho Josh Kraft. Not surprisingly, all the sparkly folks came to sip bubbly and ogle the baubles.

Among them: the super-stylish Ellie Cornish and stunning Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney, the bedazzling Marilyn Keane and her other half, John, blonde bombshell Darlene Jordan and her debonair financier husband, Jerry, the terrible twosome of Peter Creighton and Ian Watson, Bruins heartthrob Marcos Strum, NFL Napoleon Bob Kraft and empress Myra, the comme il faut Kay Lyons, fashion plate Lisa Pierpont and one woman who said, "I don't have winter clothes anymore because we're in Palm Beach half the year," to which someone else replied, "May that be the worst of your problems."

However, the evening's funniest exchange took place between two guests who were discussing the third marriage of a mutual friend.

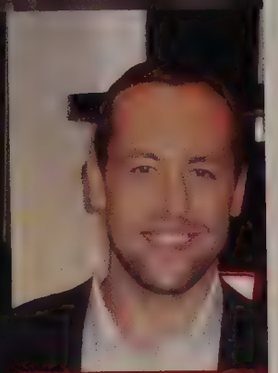
"Wouldn't you call that a triumph of optimism over common sense?

"Well, yes, but at least she's got the same name as wife No. 2, so we don't have to remember a new one."

En Pointe

It was one helluva housewarming party when Boston Ballet officially inaugurated its new home at the Opera House.

Night of Stars began with a Champagne reception and continued with a tour de force performance that included a guest appearance by the Royal Ballet's Alina Cojocaru and Johan Kobborg, but it was the party afterward, held at the Ritz-Carlton, that really had everyone seeing stars.



On hand were such balletomanes as the ever-delightful Sylvia Pope, stunning fashion plate Nina Fialkow and the devilishly handsome David, silver fox Pamela Humphrey, Laura "Legs" Littlechild, the debonair John Ruggieri, brunette goddess Eve Rounds, Royal Ballet head honcha Monica Mason, eminence grise and former ballet maestro Hugo Fiorato with the improbably good-looking Jonathan Scott, and so on and so forth down the list of people who love tutus and tiaras.

Night of Stars

Marcos Strum at Cartier

Ann Hobson Pilot, John Williams and Owen Young at Opening Night at Symphony

Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney and Ellie Cornish at Cartier

The sparkly folks came to sip bubbly and ogle the baubles.

As flawless as the dancing onstage was, it was the dancing at the party afterward—with the entire company shakin' their money makers alongside the benefactors and socialites—that made it worth the price of admission.

As one onlooker put it: "Good thing they're not union, because they'd be getting time-and-a-half right now."

And the Band Played On

The fall social season doesn't officially start until Opening Night at Symphony, which was especially eventful this year because of an appearance by Russian pianist Evgeny Kissin and a world premiere of a piece written by John Williams for retiring BSO harpist Ann Hobson Pilot.

Among the attendees: North Shore grande dame Winnie Gray and her statuesque daughter, Alex Weberg, über-philanthropists John and Diddy Cullinane and Ray and Maria Stata, board chair Ed Linde and the lovely Joyce, documentary filmmaker Susan Guillory, liquor tycoon Carmine Martignetti and the flawless Beth, Cambridge doyenne Susan Paine, art collector Roberta Cohn and her other half, cardiologist-to-the-stars Larry, MFA grand poobah Malcolm Rogers, judge Nonnie Burnes, the inimitable Allie Achtmeyer and one woman who stalked the waiter with the tray of caviar.

After the concert, a feast was held in the ballroom at the Copley Plaza, which could've doubled for Versailles, and one woman said, "If dinner's cold it's Kissin's fault," because he played an encore (Schubert, arranged by Liszt) after receiving a deservedly thunderous ovation.

Then there was the attendee who told his wife, "That guy you just introduced me to is the perfect example of why you should never eat smoked salmon appetizers, ever."

However, the evening's most amusing remark came from the pre-facelift socialite who said, "I've learned that there are things I want and things I need, but I'm still a whore for jewelry." ✖✖✖

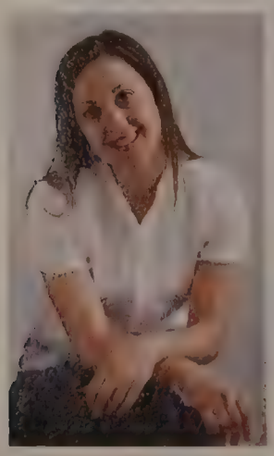
Bumps Along the Way

Waiting for my latte at Espresso Royale on Newbury, I eavesdropped on a group of 30-something hipsters.

"You have to get an iPhone so we can bump numbers," one woman insisted, brandishing her scooped bagel.



"Bump, huh?" replied a guy with emo hair who looked vaguely famous.

His friends dissolved in laughter.

Oh, to be out of touch. I'd only learned the term for magically swapping contact information a few days before. From an intern.

To keep this sad story from happening to you, use our pop-culture cheat sheet. It's all there, from food and fashion to beauty and entertainment.

It goes without saying that Friday Night Lights is still the best show on television. Connie Britton on the cover. Holla!

And... a staffer just flagged that expression as uncool.

See, it's tough to be hip—but don't let that turn you into a trend slave. Take a cue from our annual group of stylish locals and make a statement with accessories.

I'm gonna stick feathers to my shirt once I finish eating some fried chicken and bumping. But first I have to buy an iPhone.

Neck of a Job

ROMANCING THE STONE

JENNIFER PARRISH, 40, approaches jewelry with the eye of an art historian. The Stoneham-based designer, whose works adorn characters on screens big (Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix) and small (30 Rock), handpaints her pieces, pulling inspiration from the Middle Ages, the pre-Raphaelites and other sources. Her most famous creation is Ugly Betty's "Bee Necklace," a reproduction of an ornament Parrish saw in a painting of Anne Boleyn. "Now it's become such a huge part of her character."

ANDREW RIMAS

Cocktail

Seasonal Suds

As wine culture has become less staid, the previously unorthodox idea to drink whatever you want, regardless of what's for dinner, has fallen into favor. The beer scene, on the other hand, is growing more refined, making Andrew Merrick's stance seem similarly iconoclastic. "I just drink my favorites all year round, unless a seasonal is really worth it."

So if the Charles Street Liquors beer director selects a few fall beers, you might give them a go. "People are looking for darker, richer beers, something to sit with by the fire on a sheepskin rug," Merrick says. "Porters are now back on the scene, full force." Try locally craft-brewed Mayflower Porter ($9.20, six-pack). "People have been lapping it up and loving it," he enthuses. Or quaff some Victory Festbier ($9.50), a rich, traditional Oktoberfest-style lager.

Bottles of Southern Tier's Pumking Imperial Pumpkin Ale ($7.45) may be the store's most popular seasonal, but Merrick calls the Founders Breakfast Stout ($3.45, bottle; $11.95, six-pack) "one of the year's great beers." Dark and fortifying with flavors of double chocolate and coffee, it's got three delicious vices in the same bottle. Sure to be as tasty in May as it is in October. NICK ALTSCHULLER

White Rice Advised

Of all the tempting dishes on the menu at this simple spot in North Cambridge, "boiled fish" doesn't have quite the same ring to it as, say, "handmade dumplings" or "fried tofu with pork and black bean sauce." (Both delicious, by the way.) What it does have is meaty chunks of tilapia, red and white cabbage leaves, and Chinese celery shoots. Those ingredients swim together in a full-bodied broth that gets its heat from a triple-whammy of Szechuan-style fire: fermented bean paste, peppercorn-infused oil and a tongue-tingling garnish. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Going Out

Quit Your Bitchin'

It was perhaps with no small measure of relief that Coolidge Corner residents found a restaurant under construction in their neighborhood that wasn't a sushi place. Still, there may have been some trepidation when the signs went up announcing the venue would share its name with the bar from Three's Company.

"I never watched the damn show," co-owner Kristian Deyesso assures. "But it seemed like they were going to that place all the time, so we liked the concept."

And thus, the Regal Beagle isn't trying to meet some nostalgic urge but rather aims to provide a service that seemed lacking. As Deyesso says, there was a need for "a neighborhood joint" in an area where a beer and a barstool can really only be had at one other place.

THE REGAL BEAGLE
308 Harvard St., Brookline
(617-739-5151)

"I was actually at the [Coolidge Corner] Clubhouse, and I came out and saw the 'space for rent' sign," Deyesso recalls. "I said, 'Wow, that'd be perfect.'"

Deyesso and partner Chris Tocchio plan to tone down the tongue-in-cheek vibe of their other venue, Church, in favor of a simple, consistent approach. The 50-plus-seat restaurant will serve straightforward cuisine like lamb chops ($20) and roast chicken ($18), with rotating cocktail and beer menus.

Deyesso hopes for a late-October opening, though customers have been stopping by since construction started. "The feedback is they can't wait," he says. "Everyone from 18-year-olds to 60-year-olds."

Half of them may actually know the name's source. Should the place succeed, all of them soon won't care.

Wine

Purple Stain

Petite sirah is that extreme purple wine, the one that immediately stains your lips and teeth. There's nothing petite about it, weighing in at average alcohol levels of 14.5 percent. And it's not even remotely syrah (although genetically there's a filial relationship if you go back far enough). So is it a total fraud? Not at all. It's a macho wine priced for a recession, with gobs of flavorful fruit. (Still, it's advisable to carry a toothbrush.) The following are blind-tasting winners. One word of caution born of experience: Don't spill it.

Master of Wine Sandy Block is vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

BERRY GOOD
Worth a teeth whitening!

Guenoc Petite Sirah
LAKE COUNTY, 2006 ($15, MARTIGNETTI, BRIGHTON)
Like its brethren, this is opaque, with a deep, ripe boysenberry aroma backed by earthy, coffee-like, hickory-smoke and floral notes. Big bruising fruit and exotic spices define the palate. Nothing delicate here but not too gritty either—just straight-ahead power and thick, lavish berry flavor. Yum!

Huntington Petite Sirah
CALIFORNIA, 2007 ($11, JULIO'S, WESTBOROUGH)
Big and juicy, with a touch of sweetness and some hot peppery spice, Huntington has got some real power going on. It's more a mixture of red and black fruit than the others, with cherry, blackberry jam and grilled plum all mingled together. It's very full-bodied and buffed with tannin (not surprising since it's blended with 12 percent cabernet sauvignon).

Concannon Petite Sirah
LIVERMORE VALLEY, 2007 ($15, WINE CASK, SOMERVILLE)
This is the granddaddy of all petite sirah producers, having made the wine for decades in an uncompromising varietal style from their vineyards east of San Francisco. There's a heady, bold aroma of huckleberry and dark chocolate, with a molten candy-bar feel on the palate, made slightly edgy from some root vegetable notes.

Beauty

Double Time on the Helix

I've always preferred the elliptical to the treadmill and other forms of torture. So when I heard about the Helix, a lateral exercise machine developed by Bay Village–resident Lenny Snyderman, I wanted to give it a try. The new piece of equipment looks like the elliptical, but instead of forward and backward motions, it requires your legs to move in figure eights, strengthening your inner and outer thighs, and glutes—all the carb-loving areas. It's no Dance Dance Revolution, but the machine is a good time and the 30-minute class at Revolution Fitness flew by. It's friendly enough for the non-gym–goer, but with eight levels of resistance, it's difficult enough for the fitness masochist, too.

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONES

How heroin nearly consumed a life

EVEN WHILE DESCRIBING HIS way-far-gone heroin addiction, Richie Farrell manages to come across as an incorrigibly naughty boy, into his 50s. In this extraordinarily shocking memoir, Farrell shows how unrepentant, driven and psychopathic his (now former) addicted self could be. Sex with self and others, any old where, fills his time; oh, and he has a wife and two sons. Flippantly recounted tales of theft and attempted suicide (two friends kill themselves) take the reader's breath away. But what Farrell seems to lack in objectivity and remorse, he makes up for in the vividness and wit of his writing. He's a sly guy, irreverently observing: "When she walks, her ass resembles a sack of live cats on the way to the town dump." And the staff and residents in rehab come under his satirical sword, too.

But he's lyrical as well, comparing drug use to "licking the breath of God." The sad under-story, suspensefully delivered, includes a sadistic father who inflicted "zebra stripe" beatings, then went to church. Even though Farrell was born with a birth defect that crippled his legs, his dad pushed him toward unrealistic football-playing heroism through wrongheaded love. Farrell returned that favor with a love, twisted with hate, of his own. He expressed those sentiments, for years, in the fateful language of addiction. ✖✖✖

What's Left Of Us: A Memoir Of Addiction
by Richard Farrell

The author is a journalist, a filmmaker and an adjunct professor at UMass Lowell.

QUOTE FROM PAGE 50 "Nicky or Joey haven't moved for a good five minutes. At best they're brain dead. I hold the cooker close up to my mouth with my bad hand, put the plunger end of the syringe between my teeth, aim the tip of the needle into the center of the cigarette filter, and pull the plunger back until the filter goes dry. I have 10 cc. My filter grabs everything that isn't pure heroin. My heart races and I get a hard-on. This is better than foreplay... 'What the f do I care about air bubbles killing me,' I say quietly."

RACIAL DIALOGUE

TO THE GROUP OF FRIENDS ON THE INBOUND D GREEN LINE TRAIN: After I hopped on the T this afternoon with my headphones on, I decided to sit near the five of you, with no reservations. Between songs I saw one of you point at me and call me a "WP"—your apparent abbreviation for a white person. Little did you know I then turned my music off and listened to you gossip about me holding onto my backpack "for dear life" and turning my volume up higher because I was apparently "nervous" to sit among five young black adults. I'd like to let you know that I heard what you said, that I sit and act the same way on the train no matter whom I'm near, and I'd like to remind you that racism works both ways. Unprejudiced commuter

To the mother from the Sept. 23 Impersonals column:

I have never written to a magazine or newspaper, but I feel compelled to address the mother who wrote in regarding her Pizza Pallooza encounter. Although I am not the person you encountered, I have never seen such hateful vitriol spewed in The Improper. I was shocked. You should be ashamed of yourself. Take a deep breath and look at why you are so judgmental and angry. Yes, this woman was impolite and overstepped, but your extreme reaction was more telling. Referring to someone's used clothes and their being overweight and unattractive is totally uncalled for. It is understandable that you were defensive about her overstepping, but maybe you need to look at that instead of reacting with such hate. Hope you'll think about it

Dear thumb-sucker,

Thumb-sucker, you are at least 20-years-old! But you sat there on the No. 1 bus sucking your filthy, nasty thumb while you sent a text message. I was so appalled at your disregard for public space that I couldn't stop staring at you. When you made eye contact with me, you didn't even flinch! You just kept sucking on your foul digit like a lamprey! Seek help! I'll be walking home until the weather forces me back on that bus. Grossed-out girl

Precious few ears of their sweet corn are left for picking this late in the season, but Verrill Farm's baker Guida Ponte has an all-weather alternative. Her cornbread gets its full flavor from canned creamed kernels (use fresh in season but add an extra egg), not to mention lots of butter and a handful of cheddar. Stop by the Concord farm's newly rebuilt market for this and other baked goods (ahem, pecan pie), or clip Ponte's recipe and make it at home.

CITY TABLE GETS SET

Casual dining is the thing.

ANOTHER STEP AWAY from fine dining and fancy restaurant names: About a month after Azure in the Lenox Hotel closed, its replacement—City Table—is opening with hopes of drawing a neighborhood crowd seeking a more casual (read: less expensive) experience.

The only thing that can create a true neighborhood hangout is, of course, the neighbors themselves, but general manager Rob George says all the pieces are in place. Formerly formal, the dining room has been repainted "with warm colors," and the new menu is "very affordable," he adds. Entrees range from $15 to $27 (for the blue-cheese–crusted filet), and a handful of sandwiches are under 10 bucks. Neighbors who like a little continuity with their change will be pleased to know that former Azure executive chef Dennis Wilson has stayed on at City Table.

OVER IN HARVARD SQUARE, the trend of unfussy names continues with the expected opening of the Brattle House Tavern in the space that once housed Z-Square. At least, that's the working title owners Patrick and Peter Lee have been using as they apply for city approval to open their new restaurant/bar. The Lees, who also own Grafton Street, Redline and Temple Bar, are seeking permission for late hours: 'til 1 am Sunday–Wednesday and 'til 2 am Thursday–Saturday.

AFTER A LONG SERIES OF DELAYS, it looks like Stoddard's Fine Food and Ale will finally open on Nov. 12. It promises "gastropub" fare, plus 140 beers and five cask ales, in a setting chockablock with historic artifacts and ephemera—everything from old-money safes to an ivory toothbrush.

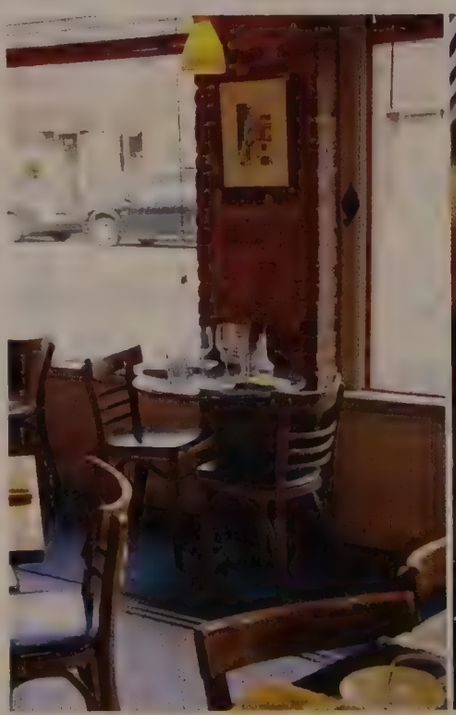
WELL-PAIRED

Bon Savor succeeds in JP with French and South American fare.

THE NAME SAYS IT ALL. Vibrant flavors to taste, palate-pleasing textures to savor: They're all here. The most enjoyable, exquisite eatery I've visited in some time, Bon Savor makes a trek to JP well worth it. A tiny boîte, its 27 seats (including four at a counter) can fill up quickly, and with good reason. Chef Marco Suarez, who helped turn Eastern Standard into a hot spot for foodie fans of the hometown nine, applies his talents to a restaurant on a smaller scale.



Despite its size, Bon Savor stands out from its neighbors, thanks to an appealing, brick façade. Inside, more brick, large windows, glossy black tables and a high, red ceiling stenciled with a rosebush complete the decor. The food likewise makes a good first impression. Little toasts with Gorgonzola, red onion and fresh corn kernels provided a nice beginning one night, while a canapé of feta and English peas, dubbed "the last cry of summer" by our waiter, delighted on another visit.

The restaurant presents its cuisine as French and South American, and fortunately eschews a misguided fusion, leaving diners to choose dishes from one tradition or the other. French onion soup ($5), served in a crock with molten Gruyère, transported me back to late nights dining at Les Halles in Paris. The kitchen turned out a pair of tender and flaky Argentine empanadas ($7), their robust meat moist and flavorful. A particularly satisfying preparation, "summer coq au vin" ($8) brought a juicy chicken thigh braised in red wine with fava beans and more English peas. Lardons lent a good, smoky flavor, but they also added a little too much salt, a minor flaw that threatened a couple of other dishes. Two dozen mussels ($9) steamed with wine, garlic, fennel, parsley, capers and fresh tomato produced an excellent, CROCKING OUT French onion soup is one bistro classic to be savored.

STEAMY AFFAIR Mussels in a flavorful broth full-bodied Provençal broth, which led us to overlook a bit of errant grit.

Served bubbling hot in a cast-iron ramekin, coquillettes au trois fromage ($13) came dressed in a rich sauce of Gorgonzola, Gruyère and Gouda, to which sun-dried tomatoes added an alluring enhancement. Roasted chicken ($15), seasoned with sage, garlic and nuggets of bacon, featured another garnish designed to prolong the summer: peas, summer beans and Brussels sprouts. With crispy skin and tender meat, the chicken easily passed my test of bistro fundamentals.

Pork tenderloin

Tres leches cake

My favorite dishes at Bon Savor included fresh cod ($20)—substituted for the striped bass listed on the menu—and pork tenderloin. The cod's firm, flaky texture was a testament to the chef's skill, and the flavors rendered by the garnish of fresh corn, chopped red pepper, cilantro and quinoa enhanced the entree immeasurably. The pork ($17), ordered medium-rare, turned out remarkably moist and almost fork-tender. Fresh peaches and arugula, along with a generous portion of cheesy potatoes au gratin, helped this main course take center stage.

To wash things down, there's a small selection of beers, including Pilsner Urquell ($4.50), and a limited but reasonably priced list of wines. A refreshing Loire sparkler ($25) did double duty as aperitif and dinner wine, while a Loire sauvignon blanc ($8.50 a glass) was more substantial with a nice balance of forward fruit and well-structured crispness. A light and satisfying tres leches cake ($7), with vanilla and caramel flavors, finished things off.

One of the most gratifying aspects of Bon Savor was the friendly, attentive and surprisingly professional service from a young man barely out of high school. His eager, enthusiastic and accommodating demeanor enhanced our enjoyment of the superior food and friendly prices. Bon savor, indeed. ***

FRIGHT CLUB

Learning to love your inner ghoul

I DON'T ENJOY GETTING SCARED. As a kid, I'd run out of the room when the commercial for Friday the 13th came on TV. I've never seen A Nightmare on Elm Street, Halloween or The Texas Chainsaw Massacre. One of my earliest memories is of a clown trying to shake my hand—I refused to cooperate, because even then I could tell that clowns were weird. In the parlance of clinical psychology, I'm what's known as a big 'fraidy cat. Although I stand by my initial impression of clowns.

Thus it's probably no surprise that I've never been inside a haunted house. I find life scary enough. But when SpookyWorld offers me a chance to get on the other side of the business—working as an actor inside their Sleep Stalkers attraction—I decide to confront my fears head-on. Which is to say, by jumping out at kids and trying to scare them so bad they pee themselves.

I drive to Litchfield, N.H., and meet the aptly named Joel Fearon to get a bit of coaching before my Sleep Stalkers debut. Fearon's title is "haunt manager," and he makes sure that SpookyWorld's parade of horrors goes off according to plan. Because truly bloodcurdling, nightmarish fright requires solid logistics. Do the hellish ghouls have their Halls Cough Drops for when their voices get hoarse from screaming in agony? Does the 7'4" dude lurking behind a certain door need gas for his chainsaw? That kind of stuff.

Fearon leads me into the Sleep Stalkers building, and I'm immediately on edge, even though the lights are on and I, myself, look like a bloody-faced zombie, courtesy of the SpookyWorld makeup department. It's creepy, and I want out of here.

"The premise is that this is a sleep deprivation experiment gone horribly wrong," Fearon says. "But as bad as the patients are, the doctors are in worse shape." This notion is supported by the arrival of Bob, an actor wearing blood-splattered doctor's scrubs. The chunky red tendrils of flesh around his mouth indicate that his role involves cannibalism. Bob mentions that this year he's made two people pee themselves—so far. "I like to tell them, 'I want to eat your skin!'" Bob says. "That's more scary than saying, 'I want to eat your brains.'" Totally—telling people you want to eat their brains is like saying, "Boo." People aren't gonna pee themselves over clichés.

At 7 pm, the doors open and the victims begin entering the building. I'm positioned along a bloody row of shower stalls with a guy named Joe, a seasoned pro who'll demonstrate the procedure before I give it a shot. The first group—mostly girls—approaches and Joe explodes through hidden doors and screams, "Shower time!" There is much shrieking. After they pass, Joe says, "I like to wait till the middle of the group to jump out. The people in front are usually the bravest, so you want to get the ones who are the most scared." That sounds kind of mean, but hey, we're not the ones who bought a ticket. We're here to frighten and terrify, not make moral judgments.

I observe Joe blitz a few more crowds before taking my position behind the doors, watching the hallway through a peephole. A couple approaches, and I burst out, bellowing the "shower time" line and looking quite convincing with my gory smock and mangled face. At least, I must look convincing, because I cause a grown man to practically jump into his girlfriend's arms. I'd feel bad for the guy—hell, I am that guy—if this weren't so funny.

As customers continue to filter through, some patterns emerge. Fulfilling their stereotypical gender roles, teenage girls are the easiest to scare, while teenage guys are the biggest a-holes. That's why it's so fun to make the dudes flinch even as they're sarcastically declaring, "Yeah, man, real scary." Sometimes I want to reply, "Your mom's real scary," but I've got to stay in character. It's like Disney World in that respect.

I try some different locations and find that leaping from behind a shower curtain is actually less scary than just sort of slumping out in a lifeless fashion. Also, fear can be amplified by creepily parroting things people say on their way through: When a girl hugs her friend and cries, "Hold me!" Joe strides out of the shower and follows them down the hall pleading, "Hold me! Hold me!" Have I mentioned that Joe is wearing one white contact lens? It's not a good look.

By the end of my shift, I'm no longer so creeped out by Sleep Stalkers, but understanding the mechanics of fear doesn't make me any more enthusiastic about experiencing it. I won't be renting Hostel anytime soon. I've decided to amp up my Halloween costume this year, though. Richard Simmons is scary, but Zombie Richard Simmons is gonna be terrifying. ✖✖✖

HEAD GAME

Golf reveals our true selves.

I HAD LOTS OF JOBS growing up—from selling greeting cards door-to-door, to wrapping packages for retail stores on Christmas vacation, to camp counseling, to bussing tables on Cape Cod. But the most intriguing was caddying at the Brookline Municipal Golf Course (Putterham) called "the Munie." I began doing "loops" there as a 12-year-old. A loop was each 18-hole round for which you carried a golf bag. "Doubles" was when you carried two bags, an exhausting task even if you pretended to be macho. I'd make $5 for a loop. Working the tip was the real challenge, and, I suppose, taught me a lot about the art of selling. Of course, you hung around to practice after-hours whenever possible. With other caddies, you'd putt for dimes and play the course for quarters.

Unfortunately, golf skills never rubbed off on me. I was, and still am, much more interested in the conversations on the courses, the banter and the jokes, than in the game. My body betrays me. I've often told my wife that nobody ever wants me for a partner. Years ago I was paired with a guy in a friendly match. After 13 holes, he said to me, "How much do you weigh?"

"About 175," I answered. "Why?"

He paused. "Jeez, you seem a lot heavier than that. I've been carrying you for 13 holes."

Most people who golf can't legitimately break 100 playing by the strict rules. As someone once told me: "Golf is the only thing that you'll ever do in life where you get what you deserve." I agree. But I've also heard a phrase attributed to Sigmund Freud: "Great sex is almost as good as bad golf." Mmm. A lot of you might say, "Who cares about something that's expensive, takes all day and lends itself to movies like Caddyshack?" Well, you can learn more about someone's character playing 18 holes than almost anything else outside of combat. Some of the finest private clubs, as part of their screening process, make would-be members "run the gauntlet." Prospects must play a round with several people on the admissions committee. This isn't a test of skill. It's a test of character. Are you a gentleman? A good sport? Are you congenial? Would you fit in?

People reveal themselves on the course in less time than in almost any other life test. I had an uncle who was on the board of the Massachusetts Golf Association. He was an irreverent man who made maternity clothes for a living. He created his firm's motto, "You knock 'em, we frock 'em." He had a heart condition called tachycardia, an irregular beating that resulted in his needing to lie down and calm his system. He played a lot of golf, both for small money and purely for sport. Invariably, his special heart rhythms would kick in during the matches. When the attacks happened, he'd excuse himself and find a sand trap to lie down in, his feet elevated. This routine would scare the hell out of my uncle's opponents. And, after a few minutes when he'd climb out of the bunker, rake it and return to play, the opponents invariably would hook, slice, whiff, miss three-foot putts and lose the match. It's a head game.

Naturally, you learn a lot about people as a caddy. I've seen unexpected people lose a ball and drop another in its place, or lie about their scores. I've heard people give secret information about their public companies, brag about affairs, rip their law and business partners. But more often, I've met gentlemen and ladies, true sportspeople, and experienced their generosity of spirit. I've golfed over the years with some of my heroes. One of them was John Updike, who wrote memorably about the sport. I first met him in the early '90s and played with him at Salem Country Club in the rain. I was longing to ask him a thousand questions about writers and their art. But he focused totally on his game, with banter restricted to "nice shot" or "too bad." I figured that after the round, while having a beer, I could ask my thousand questions. I was sort of happy (a character flaw) that Updike missed a three-foot putt to lose all the bests on the 18th hole, with the rain pounding sideways. In the locker room, he drained a beer and took off. He's still my hero. I figure he just didn't find me interesting enough. Golf, after all, is a game of character. ✖✖✖

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON RAY, PERK, JUNIOR AND LEBRON

5 C'S STORYLINES

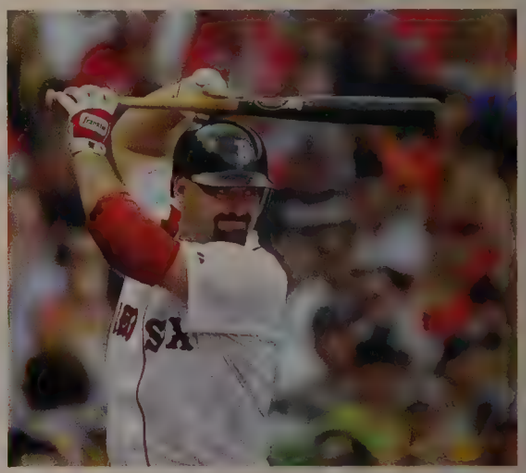
$weet Ray Will the 2009–10 season be Ray Allen's last with the Celtic's? Yeah, probably. But instead of stressing over his extension, let's just bask in his smooth-shooting glow. Ray Allen's in a contract year, folks! That's the pro-athlete equivalent of Super Mario star power! So even if this is Ray's last hurrah, there's a great chance he'll be at his best.

Perk on the Offensive I've never been more duped by a player's potential than I was with Kendrick Perkins. (OK, maybe Gerald Green.) Two years ago I wasn't sure Perk would be in the league at this point. His instincts were dull, his learning curve was flat. But no more. Perk's officially found an offensive identity to complement his all-world fire.

Big Game Who? I'm finally ready to stop talking about James Posey, and the thanks goes to Marquis Daniels. Quisy might not have Posey's championship pedigree, but he's got a level of poise and versatility that should help recoup the years Tony Allen's taken off Doc's life. (I'm choosing to ignore Quisy's creepy resemblance to Mikki Moore.)

Obligatory KG Blurb I'm cautiously optimistic about KG's long-term status, but it's undeniable that the Big Ticket made major strides this preseason. Did you see him drop that alley-oop on Bargnani's head in Hartford? It might go down as the most significant dunk in preseason history.

The Quest for 73 Earlier this month, Rasheed Wallace suggested that the C's might win an NBA-record 73 games this season. This was, of course, complete horseshit. In order to win that many games, a team really has to want it; they need to make it a priority. And on the Celtic's' list of priorities, "win 73 games" is a notch or two below "retire Vin Baker's jersey."



1 ONE MORE UNRETIREMENT

I'll hand it to Junior Seau: The man sure can Favre it up with the best of them. But after his latest re-emergence, I'm really starting to wonder if his legendary career will ever end. Who knows, Junior might end up in the same Hall of Fame class as Jerod Mayo... What, too soon?

2 SURPRISING PATS

McClutch It's no shock that Brandon McGowan can play defense. After all, the dude spent the last four seasons in Chicago. But the UMaine alum's impact on the Pats goes far beyond Xs and Os. McGowan's not only a playmaker; he's an opportunist. The timeliness of his contributions far exceeds sheer numbers.

Down on the Corner When the Pats initially signed Leigh Bodden, I was, well, underwhelmed. First of all, I'd never heard of him, and second, he was a member of the 0-16 Lions! Hadn't they just hired scarecrows to play defense? The lesson, as always, is that I'm an idiot. Bodden isn't a classic shutdown corner, but he's the best we've had since Asante split.

4 Red Sox Leftovers

And You Thought the Pats Had a Lot of Turnover... How's this for a changing of the guard? With Papi and Tek's futures in limbo, there's a chance that Kevin Youkilis starts next season as the lone carryover from the '04 title team. Unless, of course, the Sox bring back Dave Roberts. Anything to get him out of the booth...

Speaking of 2004... If things don't work out with Jason Bay, would anyone be opposed to (for the right money) bringing Johnny Damon back for another go-round? Yeah, I know, that bridge might've burned, but you have to admit—the moron can still play, he's still a winner, and the Green Monster's tailor-made for his silly putty arm.

Broken Fences After Dice-K's late resurgence, I thought he and Theo might finally be ready to put their differences aside, to start fresh in 2010. Eh, not so much. Theo's post-playoff lambasting of Matsuzaka made it very clear that this soap opera's already been picked up for another season. Hopefully Dice-K's too busy throwing side-sessions to notice.

Closing Statement Like everyone, I was deeply frustrated by Jonathan Papelbon's postseason BK Kim impression, but at the same time, it wasn't a complete shock. Regardless of his résumé, Paps wasn't the same pitcher in 2009. He was never totally locked in. Either way, I couldn't think of a less fitting end to Boston's Papelboner Era.

3 DATES TO WATCH

10/25 Straight pounds, homey! The Pats head to London for an international tilt with Tampa Bay. Keep an eye on your Super Bowl ring this time, Mr. Kraft. That queen has sticky fingers.

10/27 The C's open the regular season on the road against the Cavaliers. With the replacement refs in full effect, expect LeBron to draw his first foul sometime between warmups and the national anthem.

11/3 The Bruins face off against the Red Wings in Detroit. Speaking of which, I'd gladly dine on raw octopus if it helped erase the image of Zdeno Chara's ESPN the Magazine spread from my brain.

"Female actors are always being asked to take the most clichéd roles and make something interesting out of them."

Soroff On CONNIE BRITTON

The Friday Night Lights actress talks about bad jobs, boob jobs and dye jobs.

A STAR OF NBC'S CRITICALLY ACCLAIMED cult hit Friday Night Lights, Connie Britton was born in Boston and raised in Lynchburg, Va. Britton, 41, appeared in numerous regional and off-Broadway productions, making her big-screen breakthrough in Ed Burns' The Brothers McMullen. For five seasons, she starred opposite Michael J. Fox on Spin City. Her other TV credits include recurring roles on The West Wing and 24, while film credits include the upcoming remake of A Nightmare on Elm Street and the ensemble piece Women in Trouble. She's currently finishing work on a documentary about the orphans of Ethiopia that she produced and directed. Britton divides her time between New York, Los Angeles and Austin, where Friday Night Lights is filmed.

Jonathan Soroff: What was your worst job on the way up?

Connie Britton: The murder mysteries. We'd meet at some run-down loft and jump into an equally run-down van and drive out to Bumblef, Pa.—pardon my French—and go to some Moose Lodge where we had to integrate into this strange group of people and, suddenly during dinner, start frothing at the mouth and fall over and die. Then the equally horrible job, that I might have hated even more because it was so brain-numbingly boring, was working at the toy fair in New York. I was Ariel, the Little Mermaid, and they made me dye my hair red because I'm naturally—spoiler alert!—not red. My hair is like a mousy brown.

So in other words, the curtains don't match the rug, as it were?
As it were. [Laughs.]

So do redheads have more fun?
Well, I was blonde for awhile, and I have to say that they have more fun. People's reaction to blondes is marked. Men, in particular. It's like Blonde Nation, or something.

You majored in Asian Studies at Dartmouth. What was the career plan there?
I thought, what's the coolest language I could do here? And I decided it was Chinese. It's a liberal arts school. What are you going to do with a liberal arts education, anyway?

Beauty secret?
[Laughs.] I would have to say until recent years, I didn't have any. It's only when you get to be old as the hills that you have to start. But my biggest is eating really, really clean, good food. Or raw food. Not for weight loss, but because it makes me feel and look much better.

What cosmetic procedure would you consider doing?
None. That's my other beauty secret. It's all from inside, not outside. I think it's kind of a cop-out to get cosmetic surgery, because if you just do a little meditating and keep yourself chill, it really helps to fight the wrinkles.

What do you think is your best feature?
I love to laugh. I'm a great audience. I make people feel real happy, because they'll crack a stupid joke, and yet I will die laughing [at it].

Worst feature?
I don't have any bad features. What are you talking about? But maybe that is my worst feature.

Is Friday Night Lights the biggest underdog comeback in TV history?
I can't explain it. Considering the fact that we've had such low ratings and an obsessed, amazing fan base and critics, and that we're going to end up being on the air for five seasons, it's pretty remarkable.

But you don't have to like football to like the show?
My God, no. Listen, I don't understand the first thing about football. Not a clue.

Have they given you the keys to the city of Austin?
There are no keys to Austin. People here make us feel like they're happy we're there, welcome to the family.

Are you helping to keep Austin weird?
Yeah, I am. It's great to be in a place where that's the motto of the city, and the mayor goes to public functions wearing a tie-dyed shirt that says that.

Do you watch the show religiously?
I do end up watching every episode, but I don't necessarily watch it when it comes on. I'm a fan. I have a real short list of what I watch, and our show's on that list.

Best and worst critical response?
We've gotten such amazing love from the critics. I've had things written that sound like my mother wrote them, so I live in fear of when I do the next thing and they go back to writing normal, awful, mean-spirited things. The worst thing a critic wrote was from a short-lived series I did where it premiered right after Sept. 11. Someone said they wished they could send the pilot to Osama bin Laden because it would be the worst thing we could do to him. [Laughs.]

You've played everything from a prostitute to a landlady to a coach's wife. Which is the closest to you?
Between those three? I would hope coach's wife. I also think our relationship on the show is really interesting and complex.

Role you regret?
I don't really regret it, because I got to go to Australia, and I also made a lot of money off it at the time. But I played Shirley Temple's mom in this Disney movie. And sometimes, I look back at it and think, "That seems like a little bit of a blight on my résumé."

Ideal love scene partner?
Why can't I do a love scene with Clive Owen?

Ed Burns—sexy MF or what?
[Laughs.] Not my idea of a love scene partner. I love and adore him, but he's like family to me. He's like my brother.

Worst bit of dialogue you ever had to deliver?
Female actors are always being asked to take the most clichéd, boring, stereotypical roles and make something interesting out of them. So just about any role will have some of that.

The remake of Nightmare on Elm Street: Am I gonna poop my pants?
That depends on your level of bowel control. I think Jackie Earle Haley is going to be scary. ✖✖✖

TEN WITH STYLE

THIS YEAR'S SARTORIAL STANDOUTS

BY AMANDA KNORR / PHOTOGRAPHS BY JÖRG MEYER

"I have an admiration for power and poise. Militant clothing, jackets and hats are crisp and powerful."

CHRIS CHAUN

24, actor and creative expressionist

Your favorite creative expression?
For style to live, let the elements of truth flow from within.

Coolest piece in your closet?
My vintage British red-coat, Ralph Lauren leather motorcycle jacket and WWII vintage soldier's hat.

Fifty percent of your wardrobe is vintage. What's your source?
Bobby From Boston, because they take care of me and Bobby shops the world for pieces a discerning dude like me would love.

How do you vintage shop?
With my emotions. I have to feel the piece.

What do you splurge on?
Outerwear and footwear.

What do you save on?
Shirts and small accessories.

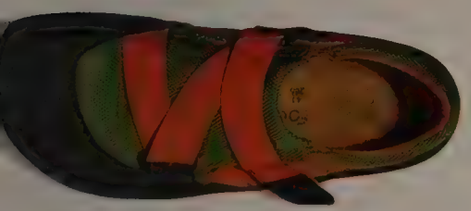
"Forget about diamonds and Prada. My camera is the only accessory I truly adore."

CONNIE MILLER
29, professional photographer

I realized recently that I have documented over 200 weddings. I find the majority of white wedding gowns to be oddly unadventurous. My preference tends toward dresses that are much more fashion-forward and creative.

Expensively cut and shows off one beautiful aspect of the female frame.

Hyper-feminine, sophisticated, clever.



I've always been far too fickle for favorites. My closet is home to an embarrassingly large number of shoes that I summon according to mood, outfit and predicted walking requirements for the occasion.

"In a casual environment, socks and sneakers are a great way to deliver that brightness."

ASIM AHMED
33, attending physician at the Children's Hospital Boston/ Harvard Medical School

Casual professional. In a children's hospital it's important to cultivate an environment that promotes hope and healing. Dark, rich, solid colors in slacks or a sweater, along with a vibrant or whimsical accessory or tie, can convey a professional, yet positive atmosphere.

[When I] see health professionals wearing scrubs at a restaurant or in a grocery store . . . [it] seems in poor taste.

I also play guitar and sing in an indie-rock band. While my hair has gotten progressively shorter since I've moved to Boston, I feel most comfortable with a haircut that is professional but that I can grow out a little.

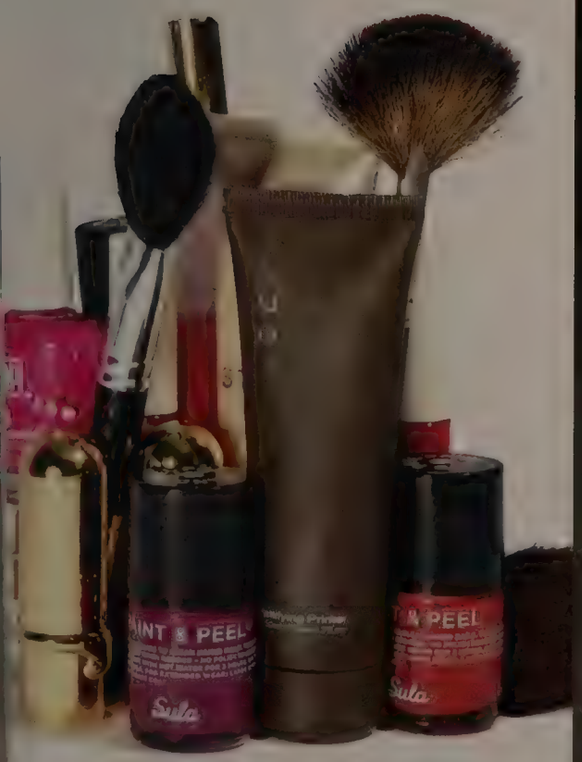
JOSHUA BUNN
26, self-employed freelancer, project manager in advertising

How does living in East Boston influence your look?
Being someone that enjoys the outdoors, living in the city allows me to combine an urban look [with] a woodsy, northern New England, preppy look that best describes my style.

Pitch your style in a sentence.
Classic preppy is being comfortable but looking sharp in whatever you're wearing.

Favorite season for dressing?
Winter is by far my favorite season because you're able to put on clothes. There are only so many you can take off.

Who has better style: skiers or snowboarders?
Skiers definitely, because they dress for the elements, while snowboarders dress for a nonexistent fashion show on the slopes.



"My goggles [are my] sunglasses for the slopes."

↗ "My animal bracelets are a little ridiculous and fun, but totally glam up my wrists."

EMILY KUMLER,
32, CEO of Prep Cosmetics

What's more important to you: great clothes or great makeup?

Hard to say. It all depends on what you're hoping to achieve with your particular look. Great clothes will make you feel sexy and confident. A great face, and I do believe one's best accessory is a healthy complexion, will make a lasting impression.

Is there a time when you've overdone it with makeup?

Absolutely not!

Mad Men: Love it or hate it?

I love the show just as much for the writing and characters as for the style. The form-fitting secretary dresses are incredible, beautifying the womanly hourglass [shape]. I've always enjoyed and gravitated to the styles of the early '60s and have collected some great vintage pieces, mostly coats, from that period.

JAHIM BASKERVILLE

38, graphic designer for ABCD, Inc., architecture student at Boston Architecture College and musician

If one designer could make your wardrobe, who would you pick?

Tom Ford, without a doubt. Hip, modern and eccentric.

Craziest thing you've ever worn?

I'll tell you after a couple of Makers and Gingers.

You told me, "Individuality is the new black." So what's your favorite color?

Kaleidoscopic plaid.

How do you successfully mix prints in an outfit?

It's all intuition. That gut reaction that says, "This works, this makes sense." It's the same task that a great chef performs—having an intense understanding of ingredients and then experimentation. It becomes second nature.

"Handkerchiefs are the 'cherry on top' for a well-crafted suit."

DANIELLE SHAGOURY
25, digital media planner/buyer for Media Contacts

Favorite fashion ad campaign?
Michael Kors has a great one this fall.

Flats or heels?
Definitely heels!

Celebrity who's clothes you covet?
Jennifer Aniston in the movie The Break-Up. She wears so many amazing dresses.

What's your favorite accessory?
A scarf somehow makes every outfit look more put-together and they're always great for a splash of color.

"Lately I've been really into gold, and I love big stones, especially in rings and bracelets."

CAROLYN CHEN

29, recruiter for the Boston Teacher Residency

[illegible] style

If you're gonna wear it, you may as well rock it.

[illegible] dress for Boston

She buys two to three really good, really warm, winter coats that she absolutely loves, even if they're a wee bit more than she was budgeting for. Because she'll wear those coats for a good six months of the year.

[illegible]

I definitely think there's an element of dance—nothing too stiff or fussy. I love clean lines and flowy, feminine details with just enough flair.

[illegible]

When I go out to dance, I'm going out to dance, and it can get kind of steamy in there. And serious dancers have serious shoes. I go in shorts and heels all the time—that's a lot of leg.

↑ "Clutches are easy. They can double as a wallet or a travel case for jewelry."

"I got [my cuff links] in London. One is of the River Thames, which is referred to as 'the devil's river,' and the other is of Venus, which represents heaven. They're a modern take on angels and devils."

RYAN ZOELLER
29, special events designer for Winston Flowers

No, not really. I find them to be overdone. On occasion I find an updated version of a floral print that I like for the summer or spring, but it's rare.

I wear He Wood by Dsquared². I love it because it's masculine, woodsy and spicy. It's great for all seasons.

I have one sweater that's a cashmere camo hoodie. I like camoflauge done in an untraditional way, [but] you're not going to catch me out hunting in it.

ABBIE MANCINI,
32, co-owner of Sip Café and senior manager of pricing at Millennium Pharmaceuticals

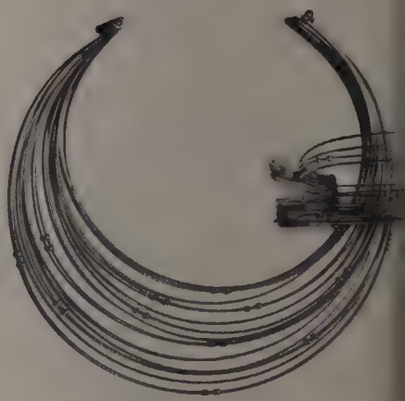
With two different jobs, what's your go-to piece?

I love dresses. I like them to be colorful, well-cut, fitted, but still flowy at the same time.

Favorite jewelry for work and play?

Anything designed by Lana Barakat, owner of Lazuli Jewelry. Her jewelry always makes a statement. It's bold, yet sophisticated at the same time.

Silver or gold?



Silver. [It] has a cleaner, more modern, sophisticated element to it. I also find it to be much more versatile than gold.

Must-have color for fall?

Brown in combination with any color. It screams fall!

Hillraiser

Battle Royale

On Halloween, zombies rise, ghouls gather and creatures convene to join forces in the war between good and evil. We all must choose a side. Well, not really, but it's fun to pretend. On Oct. 23, Boston community center Hill House invites you to dress up as your favorite hero or villain for its fundraiser at the Liberty Hotel. Come as Harry Potter or Voldemort. A cheeseburger or a salad. Either way, with music, drinks and auctions, it's sure to be a spirited affair. Adriana Stimola

All Dolled Up

Baby, You Can Drive My Car

The heroines from Jacqueline Susann's best-selling '60s novel Valley of the Dolls jump from page to stage in the new Gold Dust Orphans' musical. In Valet of the Dolls, three friends searching for fame and fortune get sucked into a world of sex, drugs and alcohol. Thinking they have nothing to lose, they give it up to every man in sight. Replete with 100 costume changes, 50 wigs and dancing hypodermic needles, this drag-filled extravaganza runs at Machine Oct. 24–Nov. 22.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

Antichrist ★★ Half genius, half huckster, Danish filmmaker Lars Von Trier too often lets some fascinating heretical notions fall victim to his provocateur posturing. The controversial Antichrist is both Von Trier's least interesting movie and also his most viscerally pulverizing. This time around he's all audacity, all the time, and even if the film's line of philosophical inquiry is downright laughable, the wily bastard is almost gifted enough to pull it off. Almost. Willem Dafoe and Charlotte Gainsbourg star as a married couple reeling from their toddler's accidental death. Retreating to a creaky country cottage, embarrassingly christened Eden, the two fall into a mutually destructive rut of bad therapy, sado-masochistic sex, talking animals and hideous sequences of genital mutilation. Von Trier is riffing on some lame, pretentious angle wherein Dafoe's rational "Man" loses his battle to domesticate Gainsbourg's feral "Womanhood" amid the twisted power of "Nature," yet there are images that will haunt your dreams. It's easy to snicker at and impossible to shake off. (At Kendall Square.)

Bright Star ★★★ The unlikely, inevitably doomed love affair between poet John Keats and fashionista Fanny Brawne might sound like the fodder of teary romance novels or tedious Masterpiece Theater episodes, but writer/director Jane Campion is after something else entirely. Campion, a doggedly idiosyncratic artist best known for The Piano, remains in awe of harsh landscapes and rumpled costumes. Often filmmakers embalm their period pieces with golden lighting and auspicious production design. Campion goes the other way, wrestling Keats' idealized lyrical interludes into a grimy, matter-of-fact reality. I always say you know a movie is working if you start to feel its weather, and Bright Star made me put my jacket back on. Sadly, Keats is a bit of a drip. Played by I'm Not There's Ben Whishaw, he comes off as a mopey emo-boy. Better are Abbie Cornish's obstinate, impassioned Fanny and Paul Schneider's revelatory supporting turn as Keats' boorish, protective patron. Still, nothing can top this movie's tactile sense of place. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Capitalism: A Love Story ★★ Michael Moore's latest muddled provocation feels like a flabby greatest-hits tour from a band all too aware it's become irrelevant. Moore has basically been making the same movie over and over again since his razor-sharp 1989 debut Roger & Me, and the shtick has worn awfully. Again, we've got the cheeky use of old movie footage, grossly oversimplified explanations of complex events, ironic music cues and a condescending voiceover narration. As always, Moore steps in front of the camera for a few grandstanding stunts that only end up harassing security guards and other working people he claims to champion. Taking aim at the odious financial skullduggery that capsized our economy, Moore trots out a string of disconnected outrages, extracting pathos from the victims and wagging his finger at the higher-ups. By the end, even Moore seems to have given up, admitting that he's tired of doing this and something needs to change. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

District 9 ★★★ With wit and originality to burn, writer/director Neill Blomkamp's scrappy little debut begins as a satirical mockumentary regarding a Johannesburg refugee camp full of crustacean-like aliens nicknamed "prawns." Stranded some 20 years ago when their mothership stalled out over South Africa, these ghastly-looking creatures suffer an institutionalized racism that smartly, if not subtly, skewers the country's history of apartheid. Sharlto Copley stars as a bumbling bureaucrat from a Halliburton-esque conglomerate charged with relocating the prawns to a newer yet even more dismal camp. Copley's such a hilarious, ineffectual blowhard that District 9 calls to mind the original, BBC version of The Office, except with aliens. Alas, the movie drops the documentary angle after the first act and settles into routine shoot-'em-up territory. The action is propulsive and often ghoulishly funny, but the movie deflates as it goes along. After you've watched a doomed alien race become obsessed with cat food and Nigerian prostitutes, gunfights aren't as engrossing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Extract ★★ Anyone who regularly quotes Office Space understands that writer/director Mike Judge is a poet of the mundane, uniquely attuned to the everyday banality that crushes

The Coen brothers explore a fruitful, existential plane.

A Serious Man
Starring Michael Stuhlbarg, Richard Kind, Fred Melamed, Sari Lennick and Adam Arkin. Written and directed by Joel and Ethan Coen. At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

Wilson Webb

THERE'S AN OLD SAYING: IF you want to make God laugh, make plans. If you want to shut Him up, ask a question.

Joel and Ethan Coen's A Serious Man grapples with cosmic mysteries on a deceptively mundane stage. It's The Book of Job according to a couple of wisenheimer skeptics. Not many folks could find a philosophical crisis in the dodgy business practices of the Columbia Record Club, but then there aren't any filmmakers quite like the Coens.

The probable absence of order in the universe seems to be bugging the brothers. Two years ago,

their masterful, Oscar-winning No Country for Old Men located the plaintive despair in Cormac McCarthy's wry, suspenseful battle between good and evil. Last year's Burn After Reading was even more vicious, a cartoonish farce in which shallow, venal people overestimate their own importance in matters of little consequence. A Serious Man offers the slight glimmers of hope that were missing from those pictures. For starters, it's a domestic comedy short on bloodshed, but don't let that fool you into thinking the brothers have mellowed in the slightest.

Set in a Minneapolis suburb circa 1967, the film stars Michael Stuhlbarg as Larry Gopnik, a college physics professor and human doormat. One day, his life begins to crumble, proceeding from bad to worse with the kind of snowballing intensity that the Coens typically apply to their crime pictures.

Larry's bratty son is always smoking weed instead of prepping for his bar mitzvah, while his daughter sneaks $20 bills from his wallet to collect money for a nose job. His odd brother Arthur (the great Richard Kind) sleeps on the couch and drains pus from a cyst on his neck while scribbling bizarre equations into a tattered notebook. The scary redneck next door might be trying to bully his way over the property line. But that's not all. Larry's got a cryptic student who thinks he can use bribery to get a passing grade, and the head of the tenure committee keeps making vague mention of anonymous letters accusing Larry of moral turpitude.

These are minor indignities compared to everything that follows. The first bombshell arrives when Mrs. Gopnick (Sari Lennick) announces that she's leaving her husband for Sy Ableman, a community leader and all-around mensch played with grandiose, patronizing zest by Fred Melamed. Exiled to the "eminently habitable" Jolly Roger Motel, Larry collapses into a spiritual crisis.

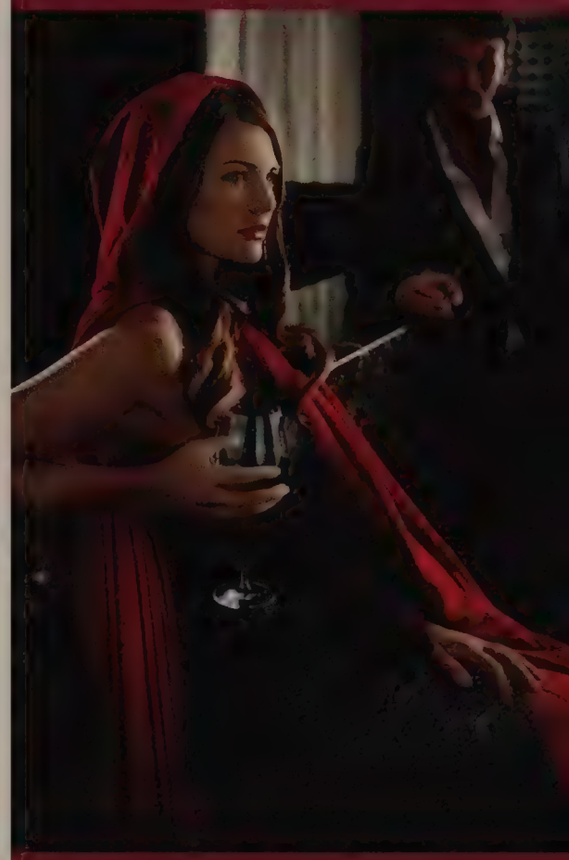
Is this all just a test of faith? Larry's search for a celestial explanation leads him up the hierarchy of local rabbis in a series of agonizingly comical counseling sessions and aimless parables. Are these epic misfortunes mere accidents of a chaotic universe, or are they all part of a deity's plan? And really, how much comfort can an answer provide when your wife is sleeping with Sy Ableman?

As always, the Coens are being dismissed by some critics as nihilistic yuksters who love tormenting their characters. Yes, the movie is mercilessly funny, and it's easy to see how the filmmakers' consummate control might strike some as Kubrickian in its icy precision. But such a reading ignores A Serious Man's open-ended structure.

The movie begins with an ancient Yiddish fable about a wandering rabbi (Fyvush Finkel) who makes a deliberately ambiguous exit, and the door to divine intervention remains ajar throughout. There are two ways of seeing the film's cataclysmic finale. On one hand, it could be just another shit-luck disaster in a sad life. But the timing of certain events suggests, ever so slightly, that Larry is being punished for a reason.

There's a lot to consider—hefty themes visualized in that droll, outsized Coen fashion. My favorite touch is a towering wall of blackboards, every inch filled with Larry's frantic mathematical attempts to prove the Uncertainty Principle. "Even if you don't understand this, you will be responsible for it on the midterm," he notes, inadvertently summing up his central philosophical conundrum.

Perhaps the only sage advice arrives from an imposing gangster—discussing an unrelated topic—who instructs Larry to "accept the mystery." Maybe there's a reason that the Coens' most beloved, enduring and heroic character was the Dude in The Big Lebowski, a zonked stoner who never struggles or grapples but merely "abides."



In the absence of answers, do we have any choice but to do just that? Accept the mystery. ✖✖✖ our souls. Alas, this follow-up to his scathing 2006 satire Idiocracy is fairly lazy and uninspired. Jason Bateman stars as the put-upon owner of a Texas vanilla-extract factory who's ground down by his frigid wife (Kristen Wiig), ungrateful employees and the bad advice of his druggy bartender pal (Ben Affleck). There's also a workplace accident and the advances of a leggy con-woman (a miscast Mila Kunis) to deal with, and that's before we meet the thick-headed suburban gigolo. Using Gene Simmons as an ambulance-chasing lawyer is a stroke of demented genius, but otherwise Extract feels like Judge took three or four different screenplays and mashed them together. None of the disparate storylines converge, and the film doesn't end so much as peter out. You know you're in trouble when Ben Affleck is the best thing about a movie. (In the suburbs.)

Fame ★ ½ It's a sad sign of how dumbed down and sanitized teen movies have grown when you find yourself longing for the "gritty realism" of Alan Parker's original Fame. Parker's version may have been gaudy and overproduced in that totally '80s way, but at least it had a bit of an edge to it. This misguided remake scrubs away all the conflicts, leaving a bland crew of students at New York City High School for the Performing Arts to negotiate their mole-hill–sized problems in some sort of sunny, alternate universe where nothing ever really seems to be at stake. The closest we get to drama is when Naturi Naughton longs to sing hip-hop, but her disapproving dad demands that she play classical piano. Allison Burnett's script skimps on scenes of actual learning and training in favor of CW storylines. Even that fiendishly catchy title song has been rendered inert, with all the zing remixed out of it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

(500) Days of Summer ★★ ½ You can tell from the title's pointless parentheses—and the fact that the female lead is indeed regrettably named Summer—that this debut from music video director Marc Webb has no shortage of the cutesy indie quirk that usually causes this critic to retch in his popcorn bag. But a funny thing happens on the way to Juno territory, as the film keeps alternating between twee, look-at-me set pieces and lacerating truths not often depicted in romantic comedies. Joseph Gordon-Levitt falls head-over-heels for wide-eyed Zooey Deschanel, and the screenplay by Scott Neustadter and Michael Weber shuffles their ill-fated courtship into jarring, haphazardly juxtaposed days of blissful puppy love, waning interest and abject misery. It's basically He's Just Not That Into You for boys—with half of the running time spent warning you about the dangers of over-idealizing your object of desire, and the other half settling for banal, sitcommy tropes like the wise-beyond-her-years kid sister. It's a shame the movie keeps sheepishly backing away from its sharpest insights. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potterverse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (In the suburbs.)

The Hurt Locker ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow delivers an exercise in pure craftsmanship, and perhaps, not coincidentally, the first Iraq War movie worth a damn. This pulse-pounding excursion to the front lines eschews political hand-wringing or sermonizing in favor of following an explosive disposal crew, dismantling deathtraps with a surfeit of rotten luck and sick gallows humor. Jeremy Renner delivers a ferocious, star-making performance as Staff Sergeant James, an adrenaline junkie so heroically spectacular at his job, it hardly matters that the rest of his life is a disaster. A succession of jaw-dropping suspense set-pieces, the first hour of The Hurt Locker initially stakes a claim as one of the greatest war movies ever made. Eventually it settles for merely being one of the best films of the year, as Bigelow and screenwriter Mark Boal take a detour to probe James' peculiar psychopathology, with results that are rewarding, though less visceral in their impact. It's a cruel, bitter and brilliantly assembled picture. (In the suburbs.)

In the Loop ★★★ ½ In director Armando Iannucci's scabrous Iraq War satire, a misfit band of lackeys bump up against heavyweight players on the eve of the invasion—a delicate time in which even an inconsequential sound bite can blossom into a media phenomenon. Supremely savvy in regard to the power of words within our media, In the Loop drops a numbskull British Cabinet member (Tom Hollander) into the weeds of an international debate, with his every vacuous utterance spun and repurposed by forces on both sides of the argument. Peter Capaldi's shadowy political fixer fulminates with exquisitely potty-mouthed rage, eventually meeting his match in James Gandolfini's Colin Powell clone. The two square off in an aria of schoolyard insults so epic I actually applauded. Visually inert but aurally astounding, the movie plays recent tragedy for cynical farce. (In the suburbs.)

It's Just Big-Boned

Fright Night After collecting candy by the pound, nothing could be better than chewing it over at the movies. Coolidge Corner Theatre entertains you this Halloween with a 12-hour horror extravaganza beginning on Oct. 31. It starts with the double feature of The Blob and Night of the Creeps, followed by four more films whose titles are being kept under wraps. If the amorphous creatures and alien parasites don't keep you awake through this midnight marathon, the sugar high definitely will. Kate Vander Wiede

The Informant! ★★★ ½ The exclamation point lets you know exactly how seriously director Steven Soderbergh is taking this true story of corporate malfeasance in the lysine industry. Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Inglourious Basterds ★★ ½ Quentin Tarantino's WWII fairy tale showcases sophisticated filmmaking in the service of juvenile ideas. Continuing his sad retreat away from human experience and into the junk-culture recycling bin, Tarantino riffs on old war movies with blithe amorality, lurching across Nazi-occupied France for a silly, alternate history in which cinema itself can win wars. Time and again, characters are rescued from harm by their encyclopedic knowledge of Leni Riefenstahl flicks or the work of GW Pabst. Even flammable nitrate film becomes a powerful weapon against the Reich. It's an adorable, if childish notion. Tarantino pairs a couple of brilliantly suspenseful dialogue sequences with far too many dumb gross-outs that indulge an unfortunate performance from Brad Pitt as the scalp-happy, half-Apache commander of a badass Jewish platoon. Tarantino rewrites history for a rah-rah ending that could only happen in the movies, and while it's fun (if way overlong), what's the point? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Invention Of Lying ★ ½ Ricky Gervais, the comic mastermind who gave us the original The Office, as well as HBO's lacerating Extras, tones down his act and sucks up to mainstream romantic comedy fans in this waste of an inspired idea. Set in an alternate universe where nobody is capable of telling a fib, Ricky stars as the one man who learns how to lie. It's a cruel world where folks blab every unpleasant thought crossing their minds. At first, it looks like Gervais might have a smart satire showing just how crucial dishonesty is to our social contracts. Then he accidentally invents religion, and all bets are off. Gervais has no interest in exploring these fascinating comic conceits, instead settling for dull chick-flick formulas as he tries to win the heart of Jennifer Garner. So many ideas are ignored as we wait for the hot babe to fall for the homely schlub who wrote the movie. Who does Ricky think he is, Woody Allen? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jennifer's Body ★ This steaming pile of snark from screenwriter Diablo Cody requires Megan Fox to actually act instead of just posing. Alas, she's not up to the task, swallowing stilted line readings as a black-hearted cheerleader transformed into a cannibalistic demon by a satanic emo band. Mamma Mia!'s Amanda Seyfried costars as Fox's needy best friend. She also happens to be named Needy, because Cody's screenplay is that subtle. Turning Fox into a literal man-eater is a setup rife with metaphorical opportunities, not a single one of which is explored by director Karyn Kusama in this grisly, self-infatuated horror-comedy. Instead, everyone stands around spouting Cody's insufferable blend of pop-culture references and affected hipster slang. Quips about tampons, Vagisil and "backdoor virginity" are not enough to sustain a movie, especially one so bad that even great character actor JK Simmons stinks in it. A structural disaster, Jennifer's Body can't seem to decide what it's about, who's the antagonist, or even where to end. (In the suburbs.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded rom-com writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely invites us to watch these characters discover what they do well. (In the suburbs.)

Law Abiding Citizen ★ ½ Stupid even for an exploitative revenge fantasy, this risible hoot stars 300's Gerard Butler as the shattered father of a murdered family. Jamie Foxx's cool, careerist DA cuts a plea agreement, not realizing that Butler will emerge a decade later in full badass mode to declare war on the American justice system. He slaughters federal judges, innocent paralegals, unsuspecting cellmates and anybody else who dares interrupt his tedious "eye-for-an-eye" monologues. The filmmakers try to have their cake and eat it, too: prompting us to cheer for Butler whenever he kills a jerk, but asking for pathos if nicer folks are caught in the crossfire. There's no coherent statement, it's just Seven for Dummies, with Butler's plans growing more absurdly complicated and inadvertently hysterical. Foxx eventually takes up arms and bellows, "F his civil rights!" at which point the audience cheered so loudly that something inside of me died. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

9 ★ ½ Expanded from his 2005 Academy Award–nominated short film, Shane Acker's computer-animated tale of rag dolls suffering post-apocalyptic depression probably played like gangbusters back when it was 11-minutes-long. At 79-minutes-long, it feels like an endurance test. We're trapped in a gloomy, rusted future where humanity has once again been wiped out by the machines we created. All that remains of civilization are nine burlap dolls with big eyes and distracting celebrity voices. In essentially the same scene played in a loop, Elijah Wood's brave Number 9 bickers with Christopher Plummer's crusty, old Number One over rescuing somebody or exploring some place. Then come the killer robots. Wash, rinse, repeat. It's a heavy, joyless exercise with little variation in tone. Even Acker's initially striking animation grows deadening, as it's all gray skies, grinding gears and lumbering death machines. This is the kiddie-flick cousin of Terminator: Salvation, which is not a compliment. (In the suburbs.)

Paranormal Activity ★ Don't believe the hype. This $15,000 cheapie drew some fleeting attention at festivals a couple years ago and now arrives on a tsunami of tweets thanks to a massive, cynical marketing campaign from Paramount Pictures. Purporting to be the found home video footage of a spectacularly uninteresting couple (Katie Featherson and Micah Sloat), the movie chronicles Katie's troubles with a vaguely defined, undead stalker. This is the laziest, most annoying demon in recent film. What passes for scares involve the creature clomping around the attic like an annoying upstairs neighbor, or every once in awhile turning on the lights in an empty room. Nothing here is novel or even remotely believable. Filmmaker Oren Peli doesn't seem to understand that everyone already saw The Blair Witch Project 10 years ago. The closing shot provides one genuinely great jolt, and it turns out that was only recently added by Steven Spielberg. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paris ★★ Attempting to do for the City of Lights what Robert Altman did for Nashville, Cédric Klapisch presents a breezy, lightweight cityscape of shockingly little urgency, where even life-and-death matters are met with a shrug. Romain Duris stars as a dancer diagnosed with a heart disease. Despondent, he watches denizens of his beloved Paris passing by from his balcony, offering Klapisch plenty of opportunities to bunny-hop from one under-realized storyline to another. There is some fine work from Fabrice Luchini as a tweedy history professor suffering a midlife crisis and sending dirty text messages to his favorite student (Inglourious Basterds' Mélanie Laurent), and Juliette Binoche weeps elegantly as Duris' suffering sister. But Paris feels, like a lot of Altman-knockoffs, as if the writer emptied out a drawer full of half-developed ideas and hopes that juxtaposing them all in a jumble might substitute for developing just one into a full feature. (At Kendall Square.)

Up ★★★★ The geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios have done it again. This tall tale of an aging widower (voiced by Ed Asner) flying his house to South America with helium balloons has no right to be so emotionally powerful, but writer/director Pete Docter weighs down the bizarre flights of fancy with sharp human sadness. Somehow the movie manages to include a 13-foot female bird named Kevin, an army of talking dogs and some spectacular action sequences while never losing sight of the moving human drama. Breathtakingly animated, Up has more strange and beautiful images than can possibly be listed here, but perhaps none more so than the crumbling old home, born aloft by thousands of brilliantly colored balloons. It's a ridiculous conceit that pays off rich metaphorical dividends, as our protagonist must learn that it's time to let go. (In the suburbs.)

Whip It ★★★ Exactly the directorial debut you'd expect from Drew Barrymore, Whip It is clumsy, overly sincere and absolutely adorable. The film is a formula sports picture done right, hitting every tried and true genre cliché with a surfeit of warmth, good feeling and oddball humor. Ellen Page, avoiding sarcastic Juno-isms, stars as an awkward teenage misfit who one day happens upon Austin's riot-grrll, roller-derby community and finally finds her voice. The script is one stock development after another, but what makes the movie work is the care and empathy Barrymore lavishes on her characters. Nothing is cut-and-dry, and there are no villains. Page's disapproving mom attains tragic dimensions thanks to Marcia Gay Harden's tempered performance, and even Juliette Lewis' roller-bully gets an uncommon measure of professional respect. SNL's Kirsten Wiig is in particularly fine form as a sad-eyed single mom who sees all the angles Page is missing. It's a familiar song but sung with conviction. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Zombieland ★★★ Placing third behind Shaun of the Dead and last fall's sly, subversive Zombie Strippers, Ruben Fleischer's Zombieland lacks the serious scares or the meaty subtext of its brethren. But it's still an enjoyable road comedy about the importance of human connection, especially in a post-apocalyptic wasteland riddled with flesh-eating monsters. Mumbling geek Jesse Eisenberg and rowdy redneck Woody Harrelson star as unlikely allies making their way through what's left of the U.S. They happen upon a pair of grifter sisters (Superbad's Emma Stone and Little Miss Sunshine herself, Abigail Breslin), and a dysfunctional family is formed. Clocking in at a brisk 83 minutes, the movie knows how to get in and out before wearing out its welcome. Just be careful how much you read in advance, as nearly a quarter of the film is devoted to a surprising detour involving a special guest star that only a bastard would reveal. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hidden Cameras break the box with playful, provocative pop.

Yan Lassalle

'SONGS SHOULD MEAN MORE than one thing," says Joel Gibb, the focal figure behind the Hidden Cameras. And one might say the same for bands, particularly his Toronto outfit.

The "gay church folk music" label that Gibb coined several years ago to promote the Hidden Cameras' art-gallery debut seems pretty limiting these days. And people have overemphasized the band's homoerotic lyrics (however coy or metaphorical) and raucous, theatrical performances.

"[Critics] like the shocking aspects and would rather focus on that," Gibb says, "and that says more about the critics than it says about me." continued on page 76

But with its fifth studio album Origin: Orphan, the group should be recognized for crafting sophisticated, symphonic indie-pop that rivals Canadian peers the Dears and Arcade Fire.

The Hidden Cameras establish graceful extremes from the start. "Ratify the New" opens the CD with a two-minute-plus orchestral drone that nods to Wagner's opera Das Rheingold before Chinese-toned violin kicks into a swelling staccato march heightened with Gibb's gothic, hymn-like vocal. Then "In the Na" breaks the drama with catchy synth-pop and a gliding chorus that sounds like the Moody Blues more than indie touchstone Belle and Sebastian.

"Na" is simply an ambiguous "unit of sound," Gibb says. "'In the Na' kind of explains my take on songwriting. I don't want to box myself in. There needs to be subtlety in writing lyrics. I want things to be specific sometimes too, and also evocative, but I want interpretation."

Apart from the playful "Underage," where he sings, "Let's do it like we're underage" and "I'll pretend you're seven, you'll pretend I'm eight," Gibb indeed keeps his verse oblique and offbeat. And the same goes for his CD cover artwork and the video he directed for "In the Na," in which Gibb and his troupe move from Monty Python–esque choreography to manic office business out in a pasture.

"When I write songs, I often have images in mind, either ideas for a film or pictures," says Gibb, 32, who doesn't have formal training in film or music. He began writing and making home recordings in high school, a time he was influenced by Siouxsie & the Banshees and the Cure, whose moody post-punk influence can clearly be heard in Origin: Orphan's darker atmospherics. Gibb didn't play with other musicians until the Hidden Cameras became a bona fide band in the wake of his 2001 debut Ecce Homo.

"I was four-tracking [songs] and didn't even think that it would go anywhere," Gibb, who now resides in Berlin, says from his mother's Ontario home. "My friends were mostly artists. They started an art gallery and booked me to play a show without even asking me. So I was forced to work on it and find people to play with and experiment like that."

The Hidden Cameras played venues from porn theaters to churches and grew beyond a dozen rotating members. "There's no fixed membership," says Gibb, who contributes guitar, keyboards, cello and drums to Origin: Orphan. "I would hate to do that because it limits what you can do."

The group has gained a reputation for its live performances—involving everything from blindfolded string players to go-go dancers.

"That's been in the past, but again, there are no rules," says Gibb, whose ensemble is expected to feature nine members for its first local date since 2006 at the Brattle Theatre on Nov. 1. "I hate to be a slave to a certain device. That's really boring. But I love to put on a show as well." ✖✖✖

Suits Him

Never in Doubt

British singer/songwriter David Gray's eighth album, the self-produced Draw the Line, actually crosses one. His earlier sound was introspective, with low-key singles like "Over My Head" and "Babylon." Now he's gone extrovert with a slew of upbeat tracks. But the shift is less an identity crisis than an evolution, since he's kept his customary acoustic guitar, piano and raspy vocals. Gray puts on what's sure to be a colorful show at the Citi Center for Performing Arts on Oct. 23.

Fifty Ways to Love Your Leaver

No. 1: Keep Their Socks

From schoolyard crushes to serious romances, you probably have tokens that remind you of past flings. Maybe you kept the drawing he left in the lunchroom or find yourself buying daisies because they were her favorite. Nobel Prize–winner Orhan Pamuk details one man's collection in his novel The Museum of Innocence. On Oct. 24 at the Boston Book Festival, Pamuk discusses his work and technique. Maybe you'll leave with another memento dropped by a fellow word lover.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER FEARING FEAR ITSELF AT PHOBOPHOBIA, HELD OCT. 30–31 IN LONDON, ENGLAND.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

While in Key West, Megan Cavanaugh and Tyler Doyle snapped a photo at the southernmost point in the U.S.—unless you count that stretch of pavement behind them.

Elaine Chu and Dottie Martin purchased Turkish towels at the Grand Bazaar in Istanbul. It didn't get really bazaar until one of the towels made an off-color joke about Turkish bathhouses.

Josh and Emily Miller hiked up Mont Blanc on the border of France and Italy. Next year, they plan on hiking up Mont Bic and Mont Papermate.

Darrell Dexter, you've just been named the Premier of Nova Scotia. What are you going to do next? "I'm going to take a picture with a random magazine!"

ALL DRESSED UP

With Friends Like That...

The invitation said "a London mod-rocker-meets–New York fashion romp," so it was impossible to stay away when Saks Fifth Avenue hosted a cocktail reception to benefit the Institute of Contemporary Art, featuring über-groovy designers Marcus Wainwright and David Neville of Rag and Bone. (Full disclosure: I was on the committee.)

All the usual suspects were there, sipping Champagne and air-kissing like mad, among them: fashion blogger Olivia Fialkow, the dead sexy Gerard Vallecello, blonde goddess Julia Owens, the unfairly good-looking Megan and Seth Woods, tall, dark and handsome Justin Breton, ICA stud Paul Bessire and as many people wielding cameras as you'd find around John Gosselin and his latest slam-piece.

Overheard by the bar: "Look! All our friends just arrived. Let's sneak out before they see us."

Not to Mention the Chafing

The giant vase of flowers tipping over, shattering and soaking several of the guests notwithstanding, the Point Foundation's fundraiser in the ballroom of the Four Seasons was a raging success, not to mention a lovely party.

The event, which raised scholarship funds for LGBT youth, attracted a largely gay crowd, among them: puckish literary agent Esmond Harmsworth and his other half, Jim Richardson, interior design avatar Michael Bombara, clothes horse Gary Sullivan, the irresistible Wendell K. Chestnut and Zane Bell, gorgeous board member Michael Poirier and one person who finished telling a story by saying, "She knew everyone famous from the 20th century," to which another guest replied, "Sounds just like my sister, except in her case, none of it is true."

However the funniest exchange took place when a man apologized for his dazed look by saying, "I've been staring at a computer screen all afternoon."

His friend's response: "It's hard watching porn for that long."

Food, Glorious Food...

Kids Can Cook (a nonprofit that teaches inner-city kids about nutrition and how to prepare wholesome foods) proved that professional chefs can cook, too, and quite spectacularly at that.

Enjoying a blind tasting at a Taste of Perkins

There were as many cameras as you'd find around John Gosselin and his latest slam-piece.

Chefs at the Table, a super-sparkly event held under a tent at the organization's headquarters, had such top-flight chefs as Jody Adams, Will Gilson, Michael Leviton, Evan Deluty, Jasper White and Ana Sortun preparing customized feasts for a megawatt guestlist that included Krupps galore (Harriet and Elizabeth among them), a passel of Cutlers (Joan, Ted, Joel and Randi), Brookline doyenne Diane Gordon and her daughter-in-law, Alina, fashion plate Nancy Adams, interior designer Fotene Demoulas and her other half, Tom Cote, equestrian hottie Paul Butterworth, ubiquitous hipster Ofer Nemirovsky and the delightful Shelly, and countless equally fabulous others.

The food and wine were superb, and perhaps best of all, they managed to pull off an elaborate event and still get everyone out the door by 9 pm.

As one guest put it, "I need my beauty rest... and to catch up on Gossip Girl."

Eye-Opener

Talk about taking lemons and making lemonade. The Perkins School for the Blind hosted A Taste of Perkins, where guests could participate in blind tastings and learn what it's like to be vision-impaired while sampling delicious food and wine.

Present and accounted for: blonde beauty Corinne Grousbeck and her son, Campbell (a student at the school), fiery Filipina Bianca Garcia, the ever-affable Eric Pyenson, the Perkins Trio, playing their hearts out, and Olgo Russo, who won a stunning hand-woven Tibetan rug for a relative song in the silent auction.

Overheard by the bar: One attendee observed, "They say that you eat with your eyes," to which someone else responded, "I prefer a fork and a knife." ×××

CORRECTION
The photo identified as the Kesslers was mislabeled in the Oct. 21 "Proper Bostonians." The caption should have read, "Dr. Gary Gottlieb, president of Brigham and Women's Hospital, and his wife, Dr. Derri Shtasel, psychiatrist."

Expensive Tastes

For most of us, the burger doesn't bring to mind haute cuisine. It's just a simple sandwich, something Britney Spears eats while standing barefoot outside a gas station bathroom. Well, you can erase that image—the burger has gotten a makeover. Local chefs are now hawking a pricier patty that often costs as much as $18, a phenomenon Andrew Rimas explored for this issue.

Speaking of putting lipstick on a cow, Jonathan Soroff tried to teach our resident rube (aka Ezra Dyer) how to navigate high society. Between blowing air-kisses and swilling gin martinis, Jonathan gave Ezra pointers during a charity fundraiser at a cricket club. Coors Lite in hand, Ezra emerged unscathed thanks to tips like, "Always have a cocktail. Makes it look more fun."

So grab a burger and a beer. You'll be living the luxe life.

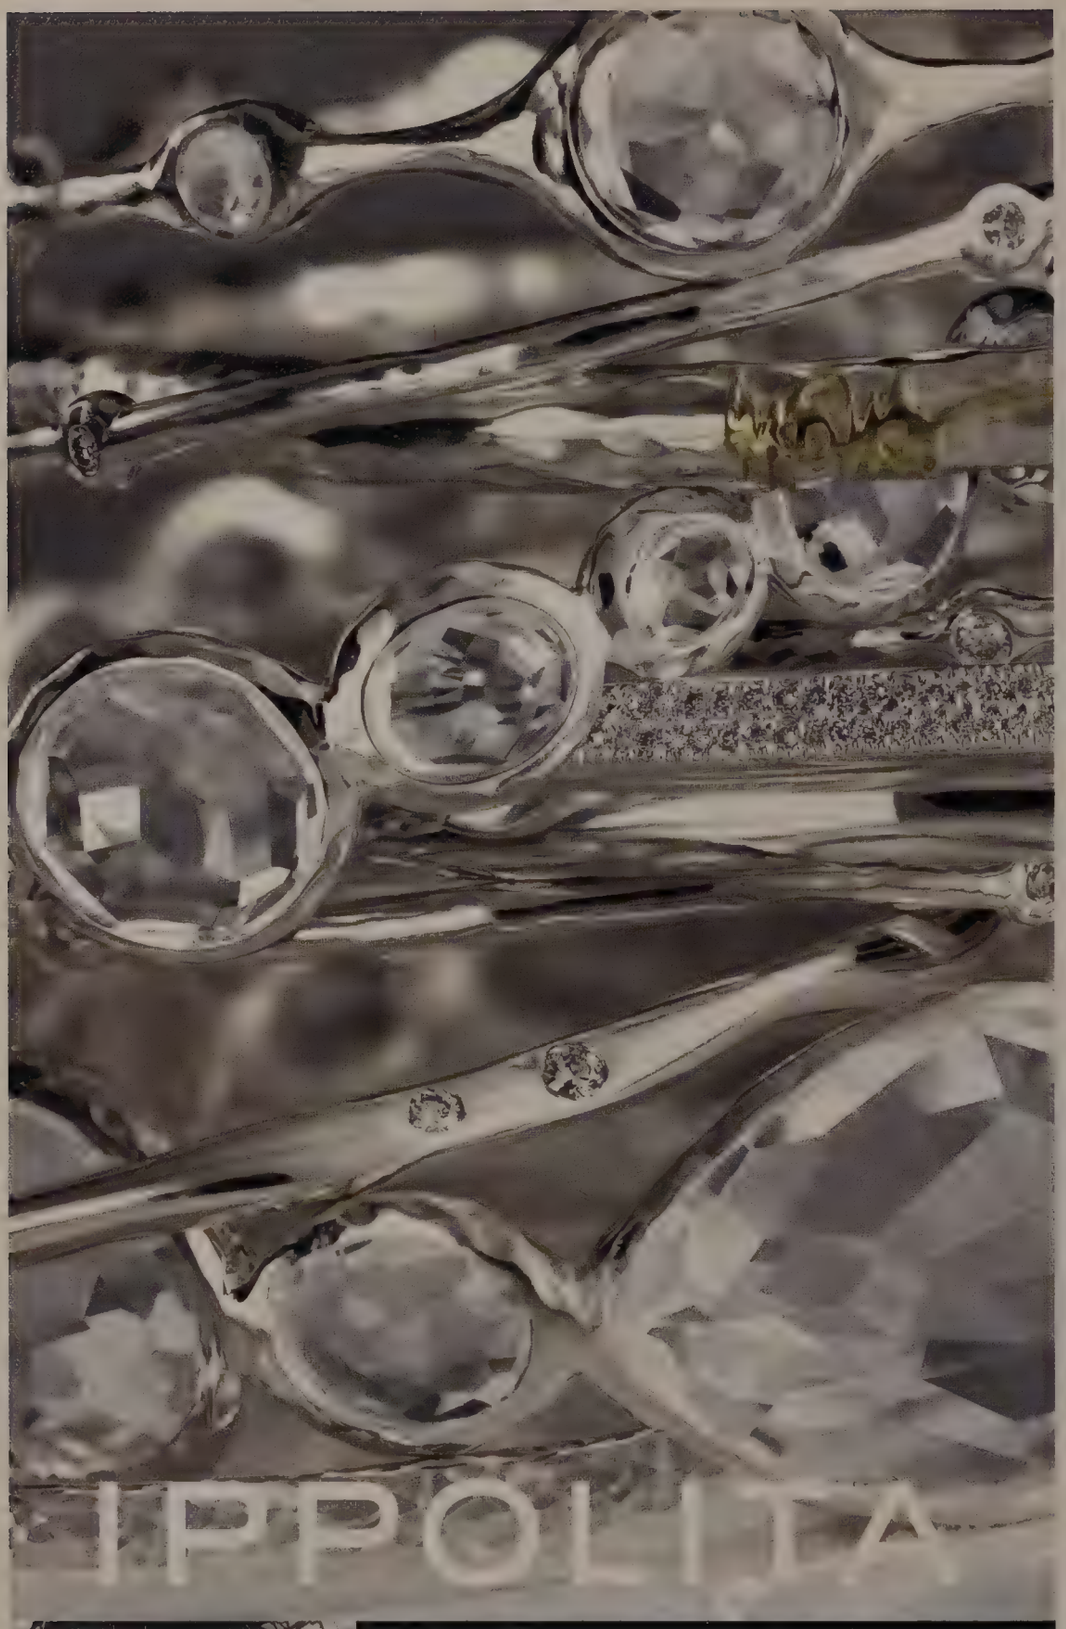
IT'S EVEN GOOD FOR THE PEOPLE WHO DON'T EAT IT.



Ask any Chipotle fan about our chicken and they'll probably tell you it's downright delicious. But that didn't happen overnight. Our quest for better-tasting chicken started with finding better sources for our pork. That is when we discovered that pigs raised on a pure vegetarian diet with no antibiotics or added hormones were not only happier and healthier, but also made for more mouth-watering meat. Naturally, we thought that was pretty fantastic.

So we applied the same knowledge to our chicken. Now all the chicken we serve is naturally raised. They're never given antibiotics or fed with animal by-products. And because we are using 100% naturally raised chicken in all of our restaurants, we're making it worthwhile for farmers to raise even more this way. And raising chicken naturally isn't just better for the animals, it's also better for the farmers, better for the environment and better for you.

ROOM AND BOARD

ONCE KNOWN AS THE archduke of Boston nightlife, hospitality mogul Seth Greenberg has returned. On Nov. 19, he opens a "boutique hotel in the aspirational sense," the Ames. "We were lucky to get the financing before the world caved in," laughs Greenberg, 46. His latest project boasts 114 rooms and the Woodward Tavern, a "Boston restaurant with a Boston theme." Greenberg promises lofty rooms, modern design and a menu of shared plates. "A young person would feel very comfortable," he says. "But we've paid respect to the building and to history."

"You should taste them all," says Piattini owner Josephine Oliviero Megwa, dipping a sampling spoon into her imported gelato freezer for a swab of sweet potato. "But the chocolate must be the last one you try." Just as in Italy, Philadelphia-made Capogiro Gelato's dense creaminess exhibits no traces of the air whipped into ice cream. The ingredients—from grass-fed cow's milk to pecan praline flecks—come through ripe and without distraction.

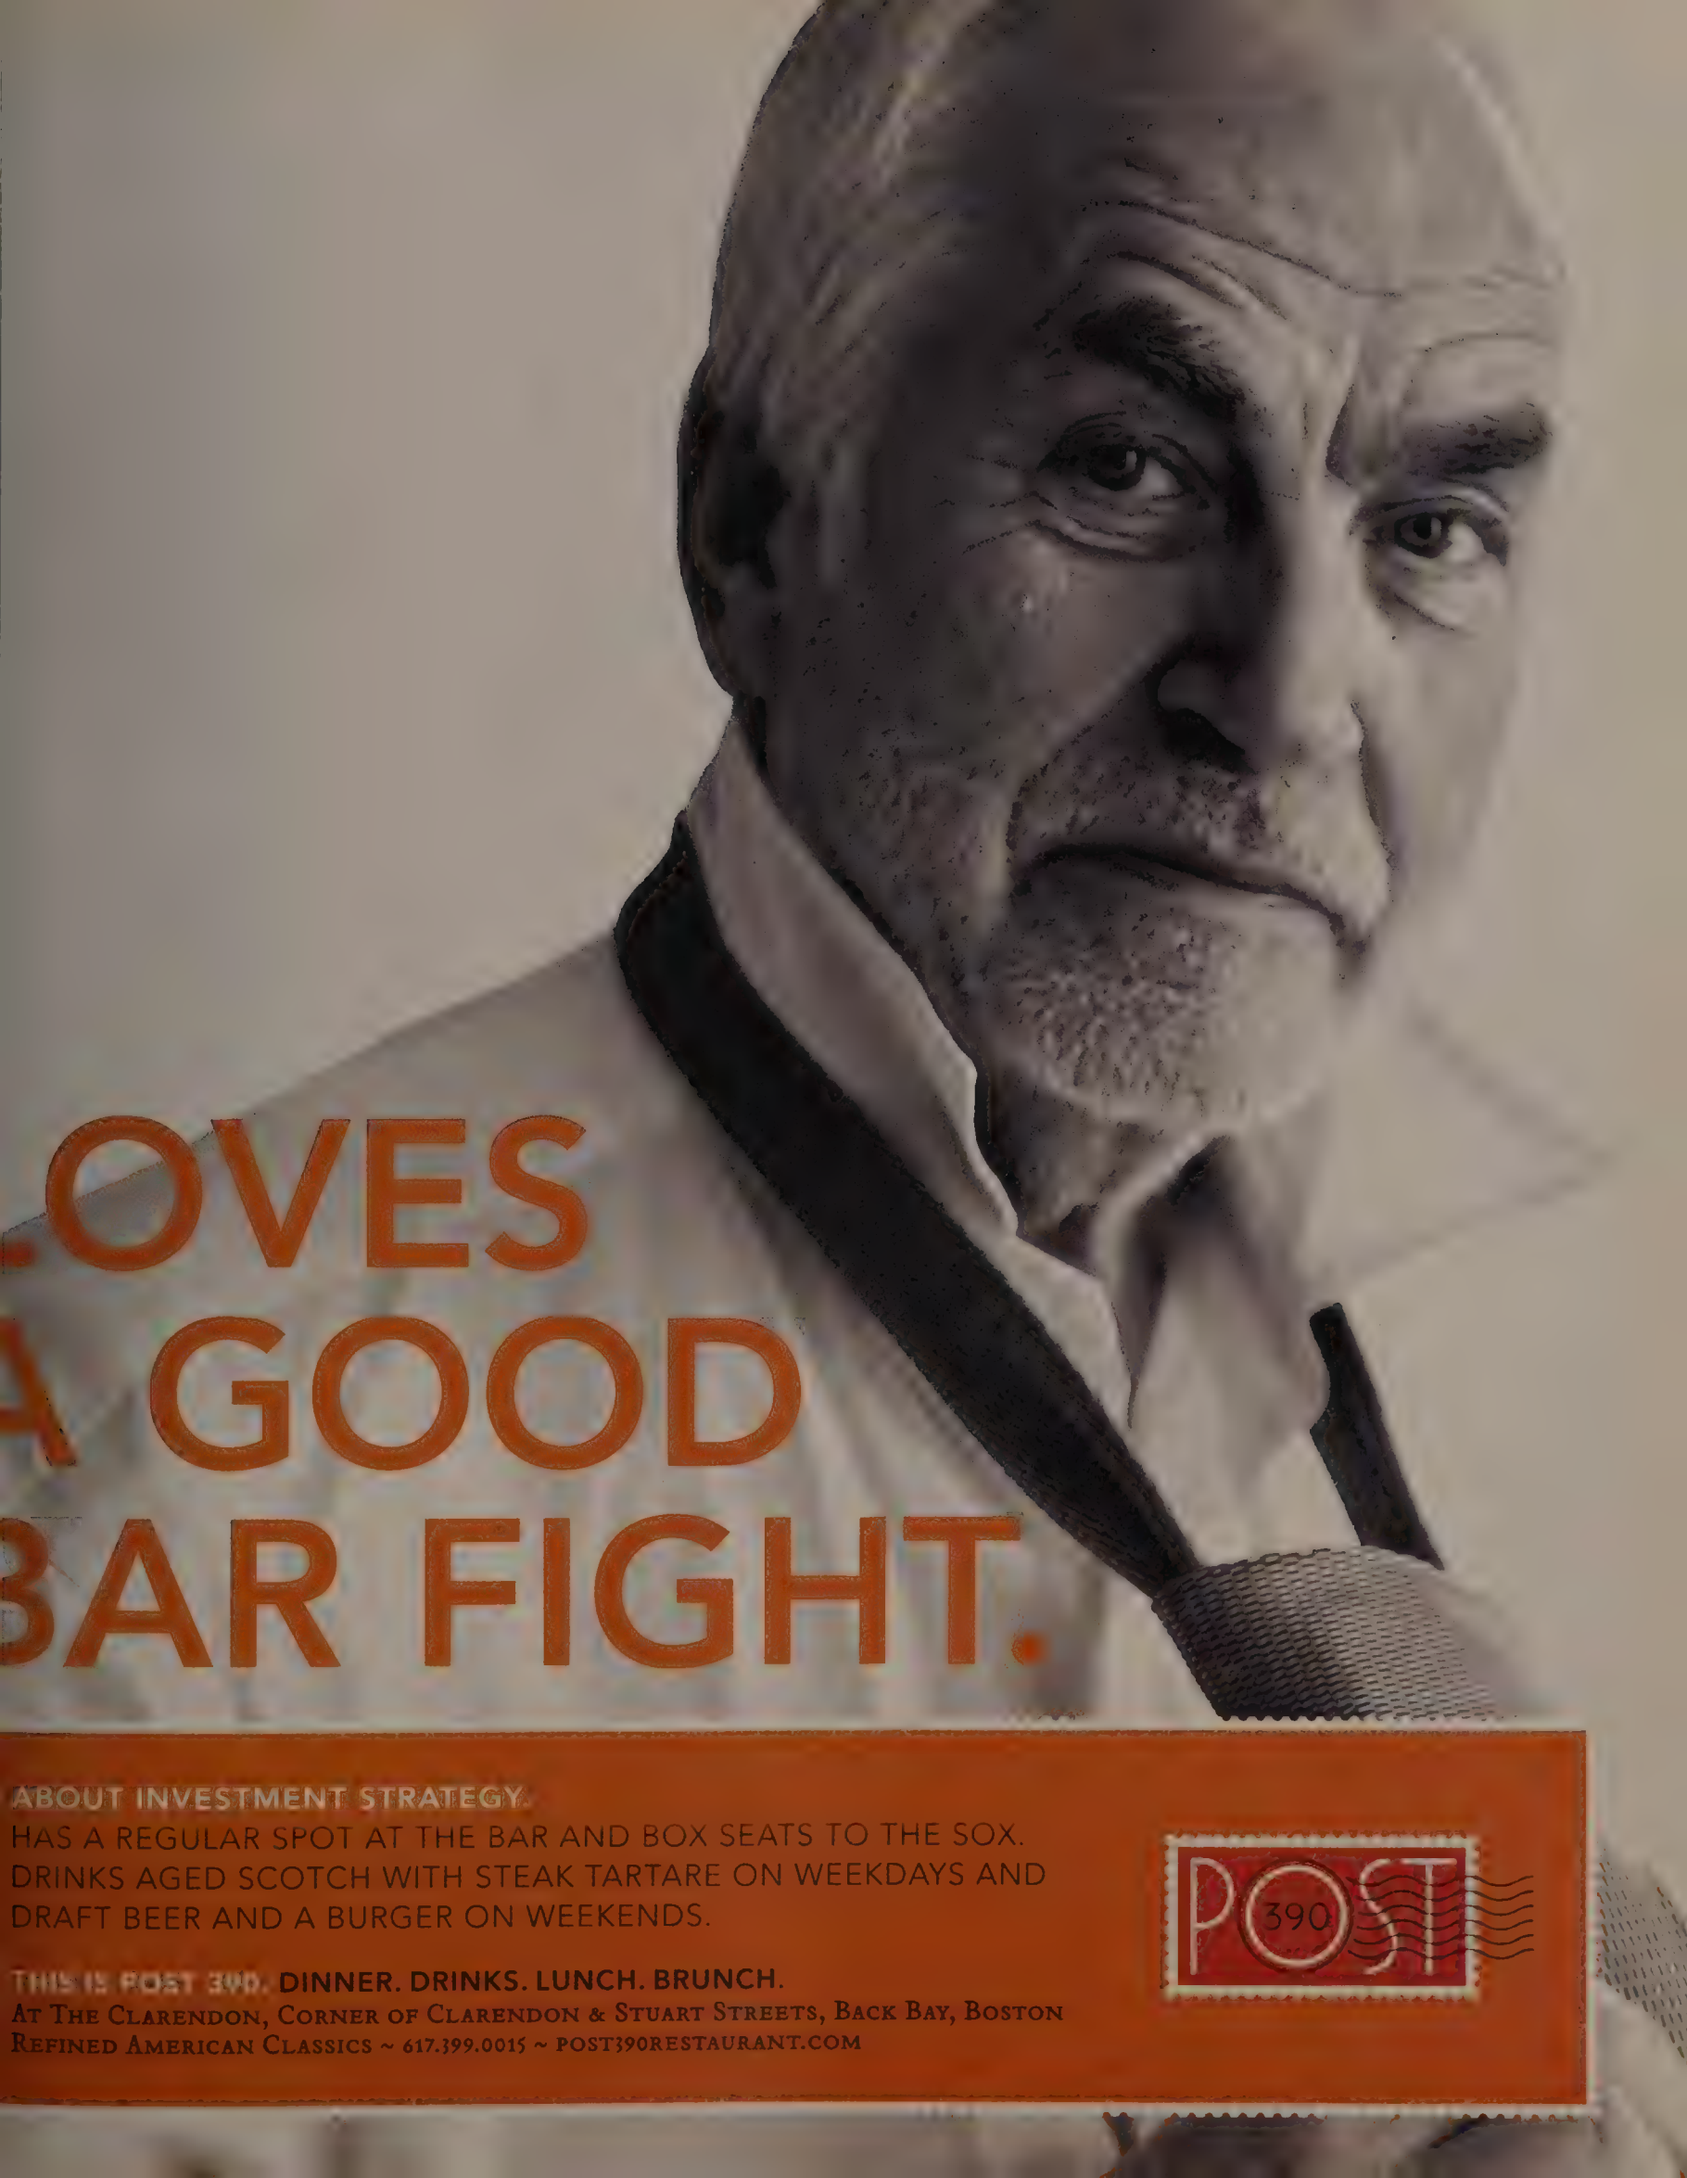
Going Out

TURN SOUTH

Just five days into training, Bistro du Midi head sommelier Kelly Coggins drills a squad of servers on pairings, while GM Doss Posey shows off a restaurant that bears little resemblance to its former self. "Everything was ripped down to the studs and rebuilt," Posey explains in what used to be Excelsior. "The only thing that remains is the door and the elevator."



By the end of the month, the 169-seat bistro will serve Provençal dishes like pissaladière (Southern France–style pizza) in the spacious upstairs dining room or at the zinc-and-copper downstairs bar. (With added points for having the often tragically overlooked foot rail.)

An impressive phalanx of chefs will man the kitchen, including former Aquitaine chef de cuisine Barry Edelman and pastry chef Sara Edelman (no relation), whose résumé includes a stint at Manhattan's revered Eleven Madison Park. Foodies worth their fleur de sel already know that Robert Sisca will lead the staff, fresh off five years as executive sous chef at Le Bernardin, the country's most famous seafood restaurant.

Sisca spent weeks in the south of France doing research. "There's very pungent, very herbaceous flavors," he describes. "There were fields of lavender growing all over the place." The resulting menu aims to recreate these tastes in dishes like bouillabaisse and barbajuans—basically French-fried ravioli—with fillers like pumpkin and sage, or lamb ragoût. Declares Posey, "The goal is not to have the guest say, 'Let's go back to Bistro du Midi for the rabbit rillettes.' It's to have them say, 'Their rabbit rillettes are just like what I had in Nice.'"

INTIMATELY ALONE

This short-story collection explores love.

Old Girlfriends
By David Updike

The author teaches at Roxbury Community College and lives in Cambridge.

THE VARIOUS MEN NARRATING THESE stories strike common tones and sympathies. They tend to be wistful, watchful outsiders, peeking in obliquely from the margins, mostly in the realm of love. David Updike gives Pete's teenaged view of adulterous, Sixties parents, offering another take on his father's novel Couples. But this Updike illuminates the loss-driven bond that divorce inevitably forges between son and mother, and the role-changing that occurs when adults usurp the younger generation's landscape of romance.

In "Kinds of Love," Daniel, married and having a painfully furtive affair, shows those worlds colliding during church services. He acknowledges the guilt-soaked ironies abounding, both in the setting and in the fact that by spending time with his lover's child he is abandoning his own daughter. In yet another tale, a man is tossing between two half-girlfriends. His therapist, Sonya, who's a Holocaust survivor, is bracingly confrontational, then sweetly tender in her appreciation of his ambivalence.

"A Word With the Boy" shocks us with racial ambiguities; a man's biracial son is taken aside by policemen in England and questioned, frightening them both. The justification—white men preying on black children—both explains and worsens their joint agony. The last story is about an adjunct college professor who's subtly pursued, and finally rejected, by a student. Emblematic of Updike's skillful grasp of romantic sorrow, the final sentence is like a melancholy, deep sigh, slowly, painfully let out; indeed breathtaking. ***

STIRRING BARBARA LYNCH

Run the presses, hold the restaurant.

BARBARA LYNCH FANS awaiting her new restaurant finally have a projected opening date: early 2010. Few details are settled—no word on the name or the menu—but in the meantime, Lynch has published her first cookbook, Stir: Mixing It Up in the Italian Tradition. Like her restaurants, the book is based on strong fundamentals—exquisite photography and clean, clear writing—that give a setting for her renowned culinary talents and capture her direct, self-described "control freak" tone. Smile and act nice? Not if you undersalt your food, buster.

SASSO HAS BEEN "REBRANDED" as Lucca Back Bay. This means two things: culinary expansion—of dishes like signature wild boar with rigatoni from the North End venue to the "new" Lucca—and geographic expansion—at least one more location to come, most likely south of Boston. Meanwhile, if you sleep really, really late on Sundays (into the evening, perhaps?) Lucca Back Bay is serving a "late-night brunch" from 10:30 pm until 1 am.

CHEF/CO-OWNER PETER MCCARTHY is moving his Somerville restaurant to Cambridge, as well as opening a second Za under the same roof as the new EVOO. "Our plan all along was to have multiple locations," says co-owner Colleen McCarthy, of the Arlington Za, which will remain open. A potential future address offers the prospect of outdoor seating for both restaurants. Expect a February opening.

CHOCOLEE CHOCOLATES in the South End hasn't melted away; owner Lee Napoli says she's relocating and hopes to reopen by February.

TOUCH OF FAITH

When Nick gets that feeling, he needs spiritual healing.

A RED FLAG GOES UP WHEN I see techniques described as ancient, mystical or spiritual. For example, it's hard for me to view cupping as anything more than light S&M with glassware, but I admit to never giving it a fair shot. On the other hand, having been punched in the face, I can attest that there's something to kung fu.

It may take a millennium, but the truth eventually comes out with these things. Consider yoga, a practice now seen as more than stretching with style. In my mid-20s, I needed a new hobby/distraction, and yoga paid dividends. The same thing happened to Christine Radice, and her enthusiasm led her to Reiki. Rising in popularity, Reiki is a Japanese form of spiritual healing developed around 100 years ago. Radice, 35, is now a master practicing Reiki, and a separate service called "angel healing," in Oak Square. Experiencing the former would only require an open mind. The latter would take a longer leap of faith than I'm currently capable of making.

As it's also known as Reiki massage, I was expecting the room in Radice's house to be all soft lighting and softer furniture—the interior design equivalent of a fluffy bathrobe. Instead I entered a small, barren space tucked into a corner upstairs; the only objects on the creaking floorboards were a massage table, two tiny, wooden chairs and a small lamp emitting a few matches' worth of light. Were Norman Bates to move to Brighton, this would be Mother's room.

Thankfully, Radice has a warm personality. Before the session began, she broke down the process. By placing her hands on or around my chakras—believed to be the major energy centers of the body—she would help rebalance my ability to absorb the healing energy, or the stuff of life, around me. As a practitioner of a Buddhist form of Reiki called Reiki Jin Kei Do, communicating with passion is a key to her approach. It's like a laying on of hands without the scary Old Testament stuff. In home TV-repair terms, she would be the tinfoil on my rabbit ears.

The session began with Radice placing her fingers on my forehead while I lay on my back. When describing her first experience, she said it felt like someone was pouring warm oil on her face. "I didn't know this practitioner, but I felt a lot of compassion from her," Radice explained. After a while, I had an odd sensation that she was gently pushing my head through the floorboards, but it was a spell easily broken by opening my eyes. Yet the room had become less eerie (although I won't call it a product of transmissible compassion).

As Radice worked a slow circle around my body, I fell in and out of a series of naps. This might seem like an odd occurrence during a massage aimed at energizing, but when you consider the themes of my dreams: two Westerns, a war story, something about Lawrence Taylor in the WWE and a disco song about bacon, maybe the stuff of life was channeling directly into my subconscious.

In total, the session felt like 45 minutes of intimate meditation, or some cross between prayer and a cuddle party. I can't say I felt particularly vitalized, but it's freeing to give yourself up to an hour of peacefulness. And Radice's enthusiasm is hard to miss. "It really is an honor to share it," she said afterward. "It's mostly just being connected with compassion and being present with the person." That I could feel, and whether Reiki works or not, there's nothing faulty in the intention. ✖✖✖

BOATER FRAUD

TO THE REAL LOSER:
OK, maybe we did cut the line to stand with our friends while waiting for the 4:30 pm Quincy boat, but there were only about 30 people for a 150 capacity boat, so we didn't see the harm. We all sit in the same seats anyway, including you, so our infraction did not warrant the shrieking, belligerent outburst that you let loose. It certainly didn't give you the right to insult and yell at the poor kid taking tickets on the dock. He does not get paid enough to be treated like that by you (nobody does). Calling him a loser at the top of your lungs was not the way to get anyone to be sympathetic to your cause. You owe him an apology, a sincere one spoken in a polite tone and volume. I got a good look at you during our unpleasant encounter, and I came to the conclusion that you're like Paula Dean's disheveled, evil twin: all the butter and pork fat and none of the sugar. Wishing people were sweeter

To the bearded gentleman spouting wisdom from his perch behind the wheel of his prized SUV:

What does a poor college grad know about the myriad rules of the road? If it were not for privileged folks like yourself wagging your finger and shouting pleasantries at cyclists waiting patiently in line for the green light, I'm sure those aholes [would] wallow in their ignorance. Being the stupid one, I assumed that the large, yellow "share the road" signs were for the motorists to observe, but your erudite self set me [straight]. Just FYI, a cyclist follows the same rules as any other motorist. The need for a cyclist to switch to the left lane on a busy two-lane road expecting to make the next left turn is mind-achingly obvious to everyone except your esteemed self. I hope you are generously rewarded for your rapacious demeanor before someone gets injured, seriously.

TRUE MAN'S COMPOTE
The West Side Lounge's Fig Is Up uses jam.

Drink of the Moment

All Figured Out

Cocktails with figs: perfect for the regular drinker.

One of the West Side Lounge's new fall cocktails, the Fig Is Up ($9) incorporates the namesake ingredient in two ways: with a garnish of dried figs and in the mix of tequila blanco, lychee liqueur, lime juice and fig jam. Using preserves in a drink isn't unusual, but it's odd to see fig compote in anything but a Newton.

West Side Lounge
1680 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-441-5566) westsidelounge.com

"My girlfriend brought some home for a cheese plate, and I thought that would go really well with tequila," assistant manager Leo Crowley explains. "I guess I think about cocktails constantly."

And why not? Rather than something heavy or sticky, the Fig Is Up balances brightness and earthy flavors, as the lower notes of tequila and fig end with a long, sweet lychee finish.

Consider it the drink that thinks it's fruit.

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND ANDY HUSBANDS }

RISE AND SHINE

The Friendly Toast hosts the most important meal of the day.

KITSCHY KITCHEN Breakfast begins with bacon for Andy Husbands.

ANDY HUSBANDS HAS been to hell and back. "The one thing I learned from being on Hell's Kitchen," he explained as we sat down to eat, "was that I wasn't the greatest cook on Hell's Kitchen." Thankfully, the show isn't reality, just reality TV. Husbands' Tremont 647 has been a beloved South End establishment for 13 years. Clearly, he's doing something right in real life.

The restaurant's known for its pajama brunches. So with that in mind, I decided to switch up this column's usual format and forego dinner for breakfast in Kendall Square at the Friendly Toast, which opened last spring. As Husbands informed me, the meal was all too fitting since his first memory of cooking involved baking donuts as a kid.

With sturdy mugs of coffee in hand, we checked out the menu and our kitschy environs. "The music is killer," Husbands noted as a New Order remix pulsed overhead. "And I like the decor a lot. Just my style."

The place felt like a classic hipster hangout: swivel stools at the bar, '50s posters on the walls, chrome edging on the tables. We sat on green vinyl chairs in the dining room among ceramic bric-a-brac. "I bet those B-Side kids would love this place," Husbands added later, referring to the cocktail dive that until recently was stationed down the street.

Our helpful server came by, and we rattled off an order of favorites. Husbands requested a breakfast sandwich ($7.25) with eggs over medium (they came scrambled) and bacon.

"Veggie bacon or...?" she asked, trailing off when she noticed the cow tattoo on his forearm. Husbands is well-known for his love of all things barbecue: He competes professionally with a few high-school friends from Needham on a team called iQue.

"Um, no," he replied, smiling politely. "We'd like the real thing."

Despite the egg mix-up, the sandwich was our top choice. The heat from toasted cayenne-cheddar bread (baked in-house) lingered with the flavors of two eggs, a few crispy strips of deliciously salty bacon and melted cheddar. Beside it was a generous pile of softened, well-seasoned home fries.

Husbands found the Hansel & Gretel waffle ($8) too sweet. The crisped gingerbread-batter waffle was drizzled with thick pomegranate molasses and topped with whipped cream. ("I'm not a huge fan of pomegranate," he admitted.) So we moved onto the Almond Joy cakes ($7.50), a double stack of fluffy chocolate-chip pancakes mixed and topped with a small dollop of sliced almonds, coconut flakes and chocolate chips. Husbands took a few bites, nodded vigorously, then stopped to ask, "Have you ever heard my pancake theory?"

Andy's Picks

Breakfast sandwich

Almond Joy cakes

French toast

In his opinion, the circumference of a pancake has the most flavor, so each cake should be small to allow for less surface area but contain a large outer edge. He took another bite before going on.

"And this stuff," he said, pointing at the almond-coconut mixture, "needs to be everywhere."

Clearly the man knows breakfast.

Our single slice of cinnamon-laced French toast ($4.50), featuring house-made cinnamon-raisin bread, was moist enough that it didn't need syrup and didn't evoke nearly as much food dialogue as the pancakes. Instead, Husbands shared stories about growing up in Seattle, where he lived with his dad, who owned a punk-rock club. Later, he went to Johnson & Wales for culinary school and eventually landed at East Coast Grill before opening his own place.

It was likely at E.C.G. that Husbands picked up a love for hosting rowdy, neighborhood breakfast crowds, as he does with the pajama brunch. Our rather quiet workday meal (the room was almost empty at 10 am) didn't provide the same social punch as those weekend romps. But the menu, which also includes savory options like kitchen-sink quesadillas, burritos and burgers, and the full bar seemed worth revisiting another day, at another mealtime. ***

HEN FAMED ALL STAR PITCHER & WORLD SERIES WINNER JOSH BECKETT PUT A SIDEWINDER ON HIS WRIST...

the last thing we at the Bozeman Watch Company thought was that we'd be developing a new design directed by such a renowned Boston athlete.

Greatly inspired by the beautiful 7000 acre Herradura Ranch and Josh's passion for perfection in everything he does, Christopher Wardle, Bozeman Watch Company's CEO set out to commemorate the Texan and great Boston pitcher with a timeless and rugged piece. Sketch illustrations soon revealed a Herradura as exquisitely detailed and understated, as Josh himself. The movement is a robust 27 jewel, Val Grange movement that is produced in the Grenchen Valley of Switzerland for the Bozeman Watch Company. After construction of the specialty movements, each individual piece undergoes testing in Geneva by the COSC or Chronometer Institute guaranteeing its mechanical accuracy to be amongst the best in the world. The end result, power with passion, the best homage Christopher felt he could provide Josh was a rugged yet refined timepiece, in the style of Josh Beckett himself.

Bozeman Watch Company has made a ONE OF A KIND Josh Beckett signature Sidewinder for auction. 100% of the proceeds will go to the Josh Beckett Foundation to benefit Boston Children's hospital.

I HATE WYOMING

Ezra's visit to the worst state in the Union.

I RECENTLY DONATED $140 TO A charitable cause. The charity is called the Organization for Stupid, Ugly People Who Live in a Post-Apocalyptic Incestuous Hellhole, but some people also call it the Wyoming Highway Patrol. My donation works out to only 38 cents per day—truly, it costs so little to provide these grunting mutants with so much. Hey, maybe I'm bitter over my speeding ticket, but at least I got to leave Wyoming. Wyoming state troopers have to live in that Wile E. Coyote cartoon, day in and day out. Their greatest occupational hazard is probably falling anvils.

There's certainly no crime there. Because if there were, then the police force would be engaged in fighting it instead of harassing drivers on I-80. I know a cop in Lawrence who says that he doesn't even pursue most of the people instigating car chases, because he can't rationally justify the danger to the public. I respect cops who work in dangerous environments and care about protecting their towns. On the other hand, you have the Wyoming Highway Patrol, writing 15-mph speeding tickets on a divided highway through the desert.

The circumstances of my ticket are highly suspect. I'd already exited the highway to hit a rest stop, and the cop drove down the ramp, turned on his lights and said he had me at 15 mph over the limit—which is interesting, since he was parked on a corner just ahead of the off-ramp that I'd taken. In other words, I was both speeding and stopping, which is an impressive feat. He took my license and registration and returned to his car, politely saying, "Don't worry, I'll have you on your way in just a few minutes." He seemed regretful even to have bothered me. That's when I knew I was getting a ticket.

And indeed, Mr. Polite returned with a $140 ticket and explained that I could contest it at my December court date in Rawlins, Wyo. He acted like the ticket itself was silly and I never should've gotten it, but that was OK because it would surely be thrown out in court. Except that he knew, with my Massachusetts license, there was no way I was coming back to Rawlins.

And he's absolutely right. Wyoming is dead to me. As far as I'm concerned, we have 49 states, plus a large area between Utah and Nebraska, where hopefully we can someday locate a national toxic waste dump. Some people say I cultivate extreme grudges far too easily. I don't know if that's true any more than I know whether Wyoming drinking water contains herpes. That might just be something I read on the Internet, or wrote.

Clearly, this was a business transaction, nothing more. The cop didn't even pretend that I'd done anything dangerous. This was a tax. And since I'm now a Wyoming taxpayer, I decided to check out the state budget to see what sort of worthy causes my $140 is funding.

For one thing, the governor's mansion needs landscaping—$50,000 of landscaping, to be exact. The Highway Patrol wants $138,000 for bulletproof vests to protect them from all the crime—just kidding! They want $138,000 for office furniture. There's roughly $2.9 million allocated to fly two jets that Wyoming state officials get to use. According to the state Web site, an electronic calendar "provides complete instructions on how to schedule a flight, how to reserve an aircraft, shows availability of aircraft, destinations and schedules of aircraft that are already listed, and is accessible 24 hours a day." Apparently, working for the state of Wyoming is a lot like being one of the guys on Entourage.

I know my money isn't going directly to Rawlins, the location of my court date, but they'll probably get a cut. So I hope that a portion of my $140 helps fund the new Rawlins public shooting range, where they're constructing "expanded shotgun fields." Next year, there's $192,388 budgeted for the shooting range. I'd say this is a frivolous expense, but we're talking about a state that produces citizens who sometimes accidentally shoot their friends in the face. So maybe some shotgun practice is a good idea.

Private jets, six-figure office furniture, state-subsidized gunplay—Wyoming is like a rogue Russian republic. Except rogue Russian republics are full of beautiful, vodka-swilling women, while Wyoming is filled with coal and despair. Wyoming's tourism slogan should be, "Wyoming: Why Bother?"

My ticket included a card that reads, "If you have comments (positive or negative) about this traffic stop, please contact the Wyoming Highway Patrol." I'd send them this article, but they're asking for both positive and negative comments. And frankly, I might feel kind of bad if I started getting into the negative stuff. ✖✖✖

STRIKE OUT

The Red Sox weren't a big hit this year.

IT WAS A COLD AND RAINY night, and the game just kept going, five hours and 10 minutes in all, before it finally ended in the wee hours of the morning. I've gotten used to these kinds of matches in the middle of October. Only this was different. This wasn't the Red Sox vs. Yankees. This was the Angels vs. Yankees.

The Yankees eventually won, and I went to bed in a state of misery. Weeks after traveling out to the left coast, I was prepared for a long, but rewarding October. I even told friends that I couldn't make plans through the first week of November. I had some baseball to follow.

But one Sunday afternoon an H-2 Hummer rolled over me. Hell, it hit all of us. Leads of 5-2 and 6-4 in Game 3 of the American League Division Series, insurmountable for most of Jonathan Papelbon's four-year tenure as an elite closer, disappeared. A day later, with everyone still in a funk, Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein did an admirable job trying to explain the collapse—warts and all.

The team's record on the road (39-42) was bad, but their performance against good pitchers and good teams was probably more disappointing. Epstein didn't hold back. Asked about the roster, he answered every question. The sting of the early exit from the playoffs had created a lot of knee-jerk reactions around Papelbon, making him the scapegoat, but we know better. Papelbon wasn't his typical incredible self in 2009, but he wasn't the problem.

His numbers this season, with the exception of walks, were pretty much in order. The key number is blown saves (three). Of course, his future is a different story. Papelbon doesn't seem to enjoy himself around here like he once did. Maybe the contract "stuff" is distracting him, but with Daniel Bard in the wings, his time is running out.

Regardless, it appears the Red Sox will have that area sewn up, whatever happens. The pressing need is offense. Epstein described a new concept based on a "core of 10 players." He explained that these 10 players, all in their "prime or pre-prime" years, are the foundation for success.

It sounds logical. I just have one issue. What about the other 15 players?

Think about the Angels. They went from good to great with the acquisition of one player, Bobby Abreu. Worse, it only cost them $5 million. Abreu is free to play elsewhere at the end of the season, and I bet he'll double his salary, which is still cheap when it comes to the big boys in New York, Boston and Los Angeles. Abreu is a Red Sox kind of guy. He takes pitches and isn't afraid to hit with two strikes. In other words, he "doesn't make outs," as Epstein likes to say.

The biggest decision, though, will be Jason Bay. This is a dilemma. He wants big money, and the Red Sox want him for three years. They're on two different paths. But Bay has the power in this negotiation. He is a 36-homer, 119-RBI guy. There aren't a lot of them available. In fact, he's the only one. Add that he can play in Boston, and his price tag soars.

So if Bay signs elsewhere, where will the RBIs come from? This is where Epstein will have to earn his money. The Red Sox will need to add at least one big bat in front of or behind Victor Martinez and Kevin Youkilis.

Here are two options, both trades: First, bring Hanley Ramirez back to Boston. Hanley, who became a man and turned into a superstar, would look perfect at shortstop and would look even better batting third. Ramirez, at 25, is someone worth offering $100 million. Imagine his .410 on-base percentage and 106 RBIs added to this lineup.

Second, get Adrian Gonzalez from the San Diego Padres. A-Gon is only 27, but like Hanley, would be worth the money and prospects it would take to get him. Gonzalez has averaged .277, 40 HRs, 99 RBIs and, more important, 161 games for the last three seasons.

Looking back, the team's disappointing playoff run was really a microcosm of their problems all season. The Red Sox lineup doesn't scare anyone anymore. It's time to make some bold, expensive decisions. Find a good hitter or two. And find them fast. ×××

5 QUESTIONS WITH THE SPORTS GUY

Q&A WITH BILL SIMMONS

Rich Levine: Your new book is 700-plus pages. What do you say to the reader who might feel intimidated?

Bill Simmons: Don't be. It's not a novel. You don't have to remember 20 characters and 15 situations and immerse yourself in a fictional world. The book was created specifically so that you can jump around, stop and start anytime and have a visual overload. There are a ton of footnotes, every chapter is different, and the pages aren't crammed with words so you won't be overwhelmed. You can take two weeks off, then come back to it. It's not like you're going to forget who Larry Bird is. I never understood the whole "that book is too long" thing. It's not like I'm trapping you in a movie theater for four hours. I want this book to be by your side for 200 dumps over the course of six months. I want it to be like toilet paper and a plunger.

RL: If Brian Scalabrine had been born in the 1930s, would he be a Hall of Famer?

BS: Yes. And he would be a five-time MVP. That's one of the themes of this book—that you can't really compare pre-1970 guys to post-1970 guys. I watched tape of Wilt's 73-point game and wrote that it looked like he was playing against prehistoric Scalabrines. Great name for a fantasy team, by the way.

RL: You often talk about the uniqueness of Kevin McHale, but how about Robert Parish? Is there any sort of current-day comparison?

BS: Not really. The great thing about Chief was that he was egoless. I make the point in the book that "winnability" is a specific trait. Guys like Parish and James Worthy were perfect for great teams because they didn't care about their stats and stepped it up if you needed them. That's an impossible skill to evaluate with numbers or stats; it's one of those "you know it when you see it" things. I love this about basketball. Also, I don't think we'll ever see another star player sign for a FedEx package of marijuana. The Chief was really one of a kind.

RL: What's Paul Pierce's role on your all-time Celtics team?

BS: I am a big Pierce fan, but he's not cracking the Russell-Bird-Havlicek-Sam Jones-Cousy starting five from a "who had the best career?" standpoint. He's probably one of our first three guys off the bench with McHale and Cowens. Instant scoring and can play two positions. I feel a real attachment to him, though. We went through so much with that guy, and it really didn't seem like he could be salvaged around 2005. Now he's a true Celtic.

RL: Which local team will be the next to win a title?

BS: I'd say the Patriots. Celtics are too old. Red Sox are too bland. Bruins are too cheap. Pats are the best bet. We need Brady to get back where he was, though. Not to sound like Champ Kind, but I miss old Tom Brady. I miss him so damned much. I miss his musk. I miss his scent. Damn you, Bernard Pollard.

4 Hot Storylines

The $14M Man Really, Theo? You really think that JD Drew is worth that ridiculous contract? Come on, man, not even Steve Phillips' standards are that low. Cite all the statistical mishmash you want, but baseball is still a team game. Personality and leadership matter, and Drew—your highest-paid player—brings none of that. To me, that equals bust, regardless of how fancy your calculator is.

Baby's Big Break We'll never know the exact details of how Glen Davis busted his thumb. But if he was, in fact, just defending himself against a friend, I wouldn't be surprised. Can you imagine how annoying it must be to hang out with BBD? It's like, "OK, dude, I get it. You've already made that joke 10 times. Can't we just watch the movie?"

Bergy and the B's Because so much was expected of him at such an early age, it's easy to forget that Patrice Bergeron is still only 24. And now that the Bruins have morphed into Infirmary on Ice—and amazingly enough, Bergeron isn't one of the wounded—he's finally coming into his own. So how long before the Jacobs make a push to swap him for draft picks?

Phony Maroney Let's not get too excited about Laurence Maroney's first two games as a featured back. After all, the Pats could've resigned Marion Butts to carve up the Titans and Bucs. Lo-Mo's true test comes Nov. 8 against Miami. If he succeeds, then maybe it's time to rev up the bandwagon. If not, well, it won't be a shocker.

3 DATES TO WATCH

11/4 The C's head north for a tilt with Al Jefferson and the T-Wolves. Boston will win big, but Minnesota can take solace in the fact that for the first time in a decade, their GM won't be rooting for the Celtics.

11/5 The Canadiens are in town! No, not Bryan Adams, Alanis Morissette or Rick Moranis, although that trio might've put up a better fight in last year's playoffs.

11/15 It's time for the annual Patriots/Colts showdown, and for the third straight season it takes place in Indy. What gives? I thought Peyton swore that he and the commissioner weren't sleeping together anymore.

1 ONE BIG MISTAKE

When the Cavs brought Shaq into the fold last summer, Celtics Nation was ecstatic. After all, it didn't take Dr. Jack Ramsay to realize that the Diesel was hardly the final piece to LeBron's championship puzzle. Anyway, it's been nice to have our suspicions confirmed. Soroff On KEISHA WHITAKER

The model and cosmetics entrepreneur talks about clothes, kids and being Forest Whitaker's wife.

MODEL/ACTRESS/WRITER/ENTREPRENEUR Keisha Nash Whitaker is married to Oscar-winner Forest Whitaker. Born and raised in Lynn, Mass., she graduated from Endicott College and was represented by the Ford Modeling Agency. She has appeared in every major fashion magazine, served as a cohost of E's You're Invited, worked as a correspondent for Extra and hosted TLC's Who Are You Wearing?, as well as TV Guide's Live From the Red Carpet. As a journalist, she has written for numerous magazines and currently pens a column, "Every Monday Matters," for Oprah.com. In 2007, Whitaker launched a collection of cosmetics called Kissable Couture. Active in numerous philanthropies, she lives in Los Angeles with her husband and three daughters.

Jonathan Soroff: How do you think of yourself: a model, a mom, a wife, a writer?

Keisha Whitaker: I kind of think of myself as a Jackie-of-all-trades. My main identity is being a parent, but I'm sort of the everyday, multitasking mom.

Did you always know that you were gorgeous?
Hell, no! I have pictures of me going to the prom with hair that defied gravity. I was really tall and skinny. The ugly duckling.

If I'd told you at age 10 what your life would be like now, what would you have said?
I would have brought you up to Danvers State for a mental evaluation.

Best thing about modeling?
The makeup tips, getting to wear things you can't possibly afford, the opportunity to travel and meet some interesting people.

Worst thing?
The modeling bookers who detest models. In France, we're referred to as mannequins. So that dehumanizing aspect. People [think models are] stupid or vapid, which most aren't.

Your best feature?
My sense of humor.

How much time do you put into being beautiful?
As far as my looks, I think it's a very short part of the day. Most of the time, I have my hair in a ponytail, big sunglasses and barely any makeup.

Beauty secret?
Moisturize, and don't forget the neck and hands. They're the first things to go.

How much difference have your looks made in your life?
[Laughs.] There are moments in my life where my looks may have gotten me in the door, but if I stayed in the room, it was up to me.

Do you think it's harder to accomplish what you've accomplished as a black woman?
I maybe had to work a little harder. But, look, we have a black president, a Latina on the Supreme Court. There's no way at this point that anyone can tell a person of color that we don't have a shot at success or achieving our dreams.

Ever experienced racism in your profession?
I've had incidents where I'll have a business meeting or a fitting with a designer where they'll insist that there has to be some white in me because I'm so beautiful. [Laughs.] I'm like, "You do realize that's racist, don't you?" It's actually shocking.

What do you tell your daughters about the way they look?
I tell them they're beautiful first thing in the morning, when their hair's all over the place. I tell them they're beautiful when they'll think I'm crazy, like when they're just off the soccer field.

How do you keep your kids normal?
We're normal peeps. My kids are very grounded and independent, although they realize there are certain perks. Going to Disneyland with Forest is different than going with another dad.

Do you hate being identified as "Forest's wife?"
It's become a joke to me. My hairdresser has an aunt who always says, "How's Forest Whitaker's wife?" So he put me in his phone as "Forest Whitaker's wife." I'm very self-deprecating, anyway. I'm honored to be his wife.

Favorite film of Forest's?
Directing? I love Waiting to Exhale. I thought he told the story really well, and it was shot so beautifully. It was really ahead of its time. As far as an actor, I love him in Bird.

Red-carpet secrets?
I always have double-stick tape, lip gloss, bobby pins and blot powders.

Do you think Joan Rivers should be forced into retirement?
I would never do anything to piss off Joan Rivers. [Laughs.]

Prettiest women in Hollywood?
Penelope Cruz is just breathtaking. Charlize Theron. Halle Berry. Kerry Washington is stunning. I admire them for their work, too.

Most important thing when planning a party?
Obviously, the food, and some great wine. I'm a big one for themes. I can build a whole party based on a single plate or flower.

Favorite designer?
I love Karl Lagerfeld, Rachel Roy, Jason Wu, and, of course, all the classics. I love clothes!

Oprah: corporate titan or genuine softie?
A genuine soul. I admire her for so many reasons. She's my idol, really.

Biggest mistake women make with respect to their appearances?
They get tired and lazy and stop caring. Come up with a realistic routine and stick with it.

Kissable Couture. Is it making money?
Yes, we're making money, not that it's huge. In 2010, we'll be branching out into eyes and cheeks.

One cosmetic item you could never live without?
Kissable Couture. That, and Z. Bigatti's illumination cream. It's like this jar of pricey magic.

One wardrobe item you can't live without?
A good pair of heels.

Is beauty only skin-deep?
No! You'll meet a lot of good-looking people, but if they're not genuine and nice and want to give back to the world, they're not beautiful to me. ✖✖✖

SOCIAL STUDIES

JONATHAN TEACHES EZRA HOW TO BE A FANCY-PANTS.

BY JONATHAN DOROFF AND EZRA DYER / ILLUSTRATIONS BY ANTONY HARE

Jonathan: The Air-Kisser

I like Ezra Dyer. I really do. Known him for years. He's nice to kids and animals (I think). He knows a lot about cars and football (a trait I find endearing because I couldn't care less about either). He's an all-around decent, stand-up guy. But let's face it. No one is ever going to confuse him with Cary Grant.

So when my editor asks if I would take on the absurd and Herculean task of trying to teach him how to navigate the social waters of high society with aplomb and panache, I almost choke on my Champagne. I mean, really. He's proud to be a hick from Maine. (Memo to the Poland Springs people: You should use him in an ad.) I've eaten with him; he holds a fork and knife like a four-year-old. He can be incredibly awkward in social situations. And until he got married to a woman with good taste, he dressed like a complete and total yutz. How could you make a silk purse out of that sow's ear? What am I, Prof. Henry Fing Higgins?

But I do love a challenge, and it sounds like an intriguing anthropology experiment. That, combined with the startling realization that my editor is, in fact, my boss (who knew?), makes me acquiesce to her request. I will bring Ezra to a charity fundraiser and try not to cringe when he says something utterly inappropriate (which is my territory, anyway). I will not pretend he's some troglodyte named Ruprecht inexplicably following me around. I will try to polish this lump of basalt into some semblance of a diamond.

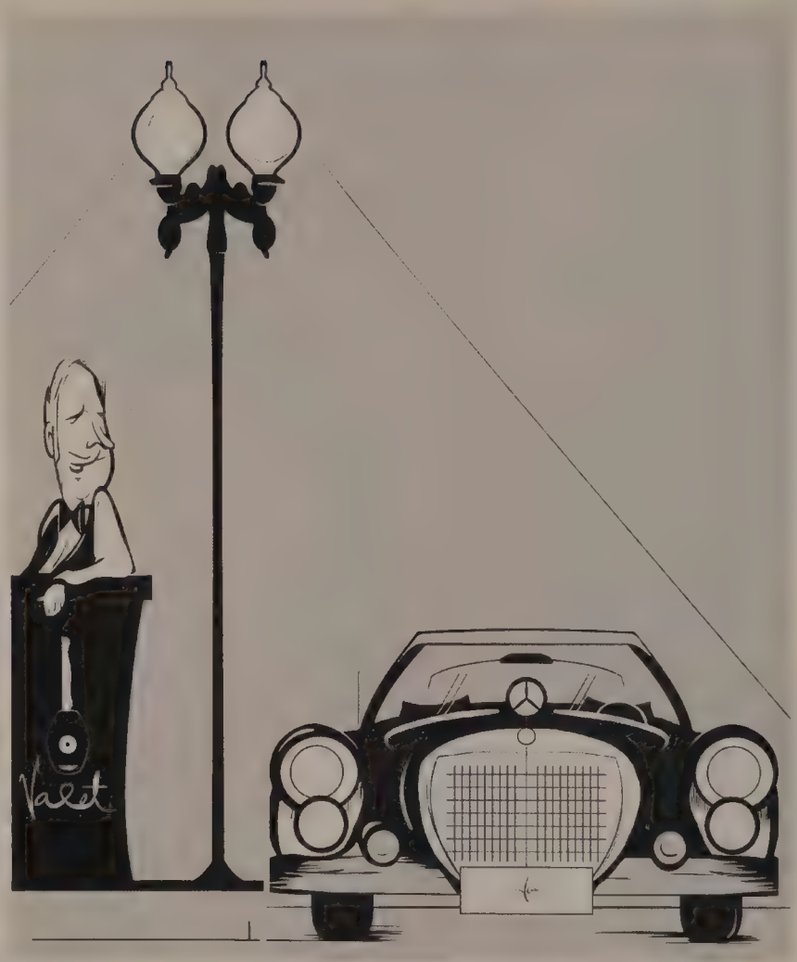
When we speak on the phone to make arrangements, I explain that the dress code for the party is cocktail attire.

"What does that mean?"

"Well, have you ever been to a cocktail party, Ez?"

"I guess so. But I forget what I wore. Can I get away with jeans and a nice shirt?"

"Ah, no. Think more along the lines of khakis and a blazer."



"Do I have to wear a tie?"

"It wouldn't hurt."

"OK, see you there."

His initial attempt at James Bond suaveness—arriving in a tricked-out Mercedes that he's test-driving for an article—is sadly lost on everyone but the valet, because apparently, no one sees him arrive. He isn't wearing a tie, and his shoes need a shine. But otherwise, he looks presentable enough. I watch him sheepishly navigate the crowded clubhouse of the Longwood Cricket Club, figuring it would be fun to let him flounder around solo for a bit. He pleasantly surprises me by heading directly for the bar.

Armed with a beer (at least it's in a pilsner glass), he eventually finds me chatting with our hostess for the evening. The introductions go smoothly, despite the awkwardness of a photographer capturing the encounter like it's first contact between human and alien.

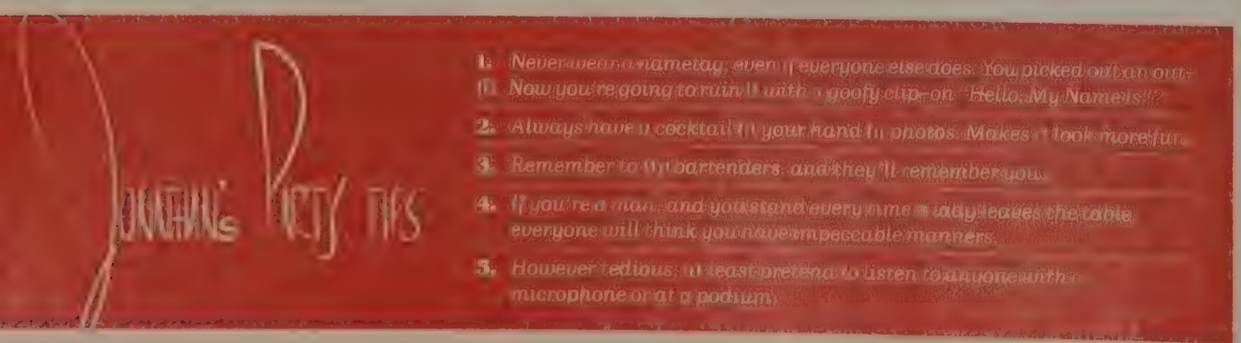
His initial attempt at suaveness—arriving in a Mercedes—is lost on everyone but the valet.

I excuse myself to grab a gin martini, leaving Ezra with a distinguished gentleman who's passionate about wine. When I return, the distinguished gentleman is nowhere to be seen—but there's no reason to believe that he was scared off—and Ezra is talking about sports with a colleague of ours who also happens to be there.

This colleague is a sports anchor, so he's marginally less boring to hear talking about sports, but sports talk from anyone makes my eyes glaze over, so I air-kiss and kibbitz with other people. I introduce most of them to Ezra, who manages to hold up his end of the chitchat. In between, when he and I have a moment to ourselves, he asks me questions—like, "How do you introduce yourself to someone you don't know," and "What do you do if you forget someone's name?"—that anyone who's ever gone on a job interview anywhere other than Pizza Hut should be able to answer.

Then they herd us into dinner underneath a big, white tent, where Ezra orders another beer, this time testing me by drinking it out of the bottle.

"Look, it's still cold 'cause the mountains on the label are still blue," he says, doing his best Homer Simpson.



"That's actually pretty good," I tell him. "Drinking beer out of the bottle is something a lot of self-made men and heirs to large fortunes do to look rebellious and down-to-earth."

We make our way to the table, where Ezra seems dumbfounded by the idea of orchids and tennis balls as a centerpiece, but I can't say I've ever seen that before, either. His table manners are better than I remember—obviously, his wife is an excellent influence. In fact, his only real faux pas is when he pokes me in the ribs and loudly asks, "Who's that guy?"

"That's our host," I whisper, "the husband of the woman you were talking to earlier and the father of the girl sitting a foot-and-a-half away from you."

Otherwise, the evening passes uneventfully, and I must say, Ezra blends in quite well. Not that he makes a great splash, like when everyone at the ball mistook the Cockney flower girl for a lady. The Prince of Transylvania doesn't ask Ezra to dance, although, in fairness, there is no dancing, and I don't know if the Prince of Transylvania even exists.

But then again, it's not like rubes from rural Maine with undergraduate degrees from decent colleges are completely unheard of around here. And it's not like Ezra's really the Eliza Doolittle he pretends to be. ✖✖✖

Ezra: The Backslapper

When I walked into the publisher's office for my Improper job interview a decade ago, he asked me to critique the magazine. This was a difficult question, given that my first real exposure to the magazine had come a few minutes earlier in the lobby. I thumbed through the pages of an issue and replied, "I don't understand all these party photos. Why would I care about a party that I didn't attend?"

Perhaps this observation demonstrated a case of narcissism severe enough to sustain a column, because he subsequently assigned me one. But I still feel like an outlier when it comes to the party circuit. I don't even know anybody with a hyphenated name. Which is where Mr. Jonathan Soroff comes in. He's an accomplished schmoozer. Highbrow soirees are his workplace. He floats around a room greeting everyone and making conversation without becoming bored, rude or excessively drunk. I lack this talent.

So one night I join him at a prestigious charity event, hoping to learn the ropes of professional party-hopping. And possibly some social graces. Jonathan instructed me to look, "Like you just came from work at the law firm," but even wearing a blazer and non-jeans, I seem underdressed. All the guys have suits, all the women fancy dresses. I'm feeling uneasy, so I head to the bar, where I forge my first awkward moment of the night.

I'm never sure how to tip in open-bar situations. The problem is, there's no opportunity to get change, and I only have a 10. I try to break it, but the bartender has no smaller bills, leaving me to uncomfortably retreat while acting as if I wanted change for some purpose other than to proffer a sub-$10 tip. I mean, I do have a five, but I'm saving that for the valet.

Drink in hand, I find Jonathan schmoozing a tall blonde. I stand there looking like a goon until he introduces me. "Nice to meet you," I say. "Nice to see you," she responds. I silently rack my brain to figure out if I've met her before. But it turns out that everyone just says "nice to see you" whether they know you or not. This is the first thing I learn. And I'm excited about this development, because I'm the king of saying, "Nice to meet you," and having people respond, "We actually know each other. I'm your father." Well, I'm sorry, but white people all look the same to me.

I follow Jonathan to his next conversation. The topic is fine wines and where they might be found in France. I fix a medium-distance gaze across the room and act as if I'm just waiting to jump in with a pithy anecdote about the time I found a rare bottle of Château d'Oui in this great little dungeon in Grenoble. Meanwhile, I chug my beer, which gives me something to do: Get another one. When I return, the subject has changed to knee surgeries. Wine Guy just had one.

"Oh, torn meniscus?" Jonathan asks, and they're off again on a rousing discourse about meniscuses. As the owner of two robust knees, I have nothing to add to this conversation, either. When Wine/Meniscus Guy hobbles off to find some more pinot, I ask Jonathan if there are certain medical conditions common to this crowd. "A torn meniscus is the most common type of skiing and tennis injury, so that's a good one to know," he replies.

There's so much more I need to learn. Like how you initiate small talk in the first place. He recommends leading with a compliment. People like those, I guess, whether you mean them or not. "With women," he says, "pick one thing to compliment, like a necklace or article of clothing. With a guy, the only thing you can compliment is a tie."

Furthermore, "You have to know who's a kisser and who isn't. And even if someone is a kisser, if they're emceeing the event, they're probably wearing makeup that took a long time [to apply], so you shouldn't smear it around. In that case, you might go with an air-kiss. Which you'd also do if it's very warm out, or if you want to be extremely fake."

Are there topics that are off-limits? Of course. "If the spouse isn't standing right there, never ask about the spouse, because there's every chance they're in the middle of a divorce. You don't talk about your own money, but you can talk about other people's money. Never ask about business, because the presumption is that everything's wonderful. A salacious event is only fair game if you know the people involved well enough to joke with them about it. Also, if someone mentions 'the family office,' that means they're worth at least $80 million. Maybe $100 million."

This is a lot to digest. I take a pull on my bottle of Coors Light, and Jonathan tells me that this is actually the rebellious sort of beverage quaffed by people who are so rich that they don't care what anyone thinks, and they'll drink whatever they damn well please. I observe, "So, instead of looking like a Bon Jovi fan who accidentally wandered in here…"

Jonathan interrupts. "But you are a Bon Jovi fan who accidentally wandered in here." Fair enough. Jonathan, I love your tie. ✖✖✖

EXPLORING THE WORLD OF THE $18 HAMBURGER

There's soccer gear and Dominican slang and obese kids in matching hoodies. An especially shiny poster by the door shills ➜ a trio of "New Angus Third Pounders." The mushroom version isn't bad. Its meat has the texture of grouting paste, but the flavor is pleasantly like canned mushroom soup. You could find less savory uses for four bucks.

That is, unless you weigh questions of sustainability, environmental impact and health, in which case this burger is a third-pound menace. Industrial production of cheap meat is a pox on both the planet and the economy (see my book Beef: The Untold Story of How Milk, Meat, and Muscle Shaped the World, available now in a handsome paperback). Ground meat, in particular, oozes with threat. This year, a dose of E. coli from a hamburger patty left a young woman in a nine-week, medically induced coma and paralyzed from the waist down.

How did it come to this? Burgers are meant to be accessible to everyone. A people's food, cemented among our collective myths like Washington's cherry tree or a functioning democracy. America is, after all, less a melting pot than a meat grinder. Our national dish takes the unmentionable bits of a cow, churns them into identical patties, and then gives them individualistic flourishes from the fixin's bar. Replace cow bits with immigrants, and you've got a handy metaphor for the American dream. To be achieved by guacamole if necessary.

But then the burger got ambitious. Like most foodstuffs, it took on airs during the culinary renaissance of the past decade, becoming a victim of its own populism. Fine-dining kitchens starting grilling burgers for their customers who wore jeans with blazers and liked slumming at the bar, away from the bleached smell of tablecloths. Steakhouses trumped each other with toppings like seared foie gras and caviar. Price points inched out of the reach of cheap lunch and into the realm of the uppity.

The high-end hamburger had arrived. It cost about $18.

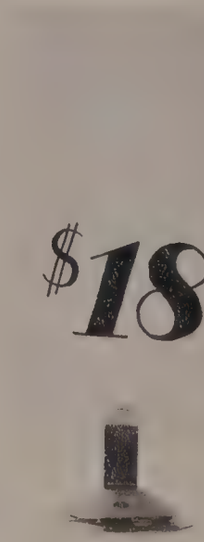
ALTHOUGH MICHAEL Schlow's Radius restaurant is slung in a post-lunch drowse, you can still sense the aroma of money. Not just from the two pickled old birds at the bar, leaning into each other's martinis, their elbows rumpling their Chanel jackets. Nor from the pair of businessmen lingering over mineral water and a fan of contracts, senseless to the clink of flatware being marshaled for dinner service.

Rather, the money is in the menu. Duo of Muscovy duck, $44.

Yet Radius is most famous nowadays for its bar food. In 2008, Schlow won the Burger Bash at the South Beach Wine & Food Festival with his Schlow burger, a dish he invented for family barbecues. He put it on the bar menu, and its popularity took off.

"Sales went through the roof," Schlow says. "There were guys buying 10 to 20 of them to go!"

Much has been said about the Schlow burger, a potent, nine-ounce patty of 80 percent lean meat laced with extra-virgin olive oil. "I wanted it to give the perception of eating a ripe peach," Schlow says. "That image of nostalgia, where we have a picture of juice running down our chin." To achieve this, Schlow takes a patty made from a "proprietary" blend of chuck ("always from Ronnie Savenor") and preps it with a heavy dusting of salt and pepper. Then he fires it on a scorching grill for a minute-and-a-half before giving the meat a quarter turn. Another 90 seconds before flipping. Then another minute-and-a-half before his tactical flourish.



"The trick to a great burger is to allow the molecules to stop rolling," Schlow says. "Like boiling water in a pot, the juices move quickly at high heat. At a lower heat, there's less movement."

To still the meat's spirits, he flips it into the oven for seven to eight minutes of gentle roasting, at the end of which he drapes the patty with a decent Vermont cheddar. "Don't cheap out on cheese," he advises. After decamping it to an equal-sized milk bun, he sprinkles it with the juices from the cooking pan and crosshatches it with a coat of horseradish black-pepper sauce, dribbling streaks of white down the sides to pool with the pink runnings. It looks like some sort of novelty ice cream confection. A crown of crispy onion strings, and the spectacle is complete.

Slicing it open like a grapefruit, the burger has a rare salmon color. It tastes strong and rich, with more than a hint of a Sunday rib roast, although the horseradish sauce overwhelms any efforts from the cheese. The onions are a nice textural buffer; without them and the anchoring milk bun, eating this would feel like burrowing into a mound of butter.

"Why do we designate A, B or C as haute cuisine?" Schlow asks. "Caviar used to be given away in bars because of the salt, to make people thirsty. Lobsters used to be food for prisoners."

Schlow says he's pleased with the attention the burger has enjoyed, evidenced by the nightly lines of bar patrons, their lips dribbling cow fat. But he seems a little bemused. "I've sometimes asked myself, 'What am I going to be known for?' For pasta? For hospitality? I never thought it would be this."

WHEREAS SCHLOW sets his price point to flaunt his burger's desirability, Tony Maws, the chef/owner of Cambridge's Craigie on Main, considers the $18 hamburger to be a moral act. "I have a very strong opinion of where ingredients should come from," says Maws, whose kitchen is a redoubt of nose-to-tail cooking. "Some people serve crappy, commodity beef. This is beef I would serve my own son."

On a Friday evening, Craigie on Main is in the grip of a gracious cyclone, a whirl of crockery and waiters sliding in neat glissades around the blinking customers. The burger is a bar item, but by 6 pm, the bartop is a minefield of martini glasses and assiettes of house-made charcuterie. Half of the women wear stoles. It doesn't feel like an appropriate spot to dive, face-first, into a pile of medium-rare ground beef.

But what beef! "I use Hardwick meat, all grass-fed," Maws says. "It's from Western Mass., from a farm that only kills about six cows per week so there's only so much available." Maws' grind is very specific—a blend of brisket, short rib and sirloin or sirloin flap, enlivened with the scraps from hanger steak. His secret, however, is to leaven the mix with both suet and marrow fat.

"This eats like a steak," Maws promises. After seasoning the meat with salt, pepper and miso powder, he flings the burger in a low-temperature convection oven for about 45 minutes, giving the juices time to coagulate instead of go up in smoke. This unhurried bake cooks the burger evenly, effectively making the entire patty a juicy center with no dry edges. The meat blanches but never loses its purplish hue, even when Maws finishes it on his "plancha" (grill) for a few minutes to give the outside a tasty sear. He dresses it with Shelburne Farms cheddar, mace ketchup, onion strings, a laurel of seasonal greens and the ubiquitous toasted, house-baked bun.

Since the burger retains most of its fat, the texture is gelatinous; it's a sort of burger confit. Without question, it's the most flavorful ground beef I've ever eaten, anchored on notes of red wine and pâté, like a lush piece of chuck steak. The toppings are utterly pointless, as are the accompanying dishes of spicy aioli, pickles and pickled red peppers. The meat, at Craigie, is the matter.

RADIUS

CRAIGIE ON MAIN

BRISTOL LOUNGE

MISTRAL

Maws seems surprised, even annoyed, when I use the word "upscale" to describe his burger.

"People spend three to five dollars per pound for tomatoes and then complain about the cost of beef," he says. "I'm not charging to be pompous. We make a statement about the quality of our product that's not subjective." In other words, the Craigie burger costs $18 because that's what it's worth. There's only so much clean, locally-raised, grass-fed meat available to an urban market. This is beautiful food. As Maws said, it's stuff he would gladly feed to his child.

So would most people, except most people can't afford to spend $18 on a sandwich. But, in the years ahead, they may have no choice. As my co-author Evan Fraser and I argued in Beef, the combined effects of climate change, drought, disease and higher world-demand are going to make hamburgers less democratic. Quality meat, like healthcare, is nowadays a product for the rich, and short of a government-imposed rationing scheme, the supply is only going to tilt farther away from middle-class hands. Meanwhile, cheap, industrial meat will make headlines with slaughterhouse scandals and occasional burps of E. coli poisoning.

The Craigie model, then, may be the most sensible. When it comes to beef, it's wise to eat the best, even if it means sometimes going without.

"LESS" IS A WORD that's rarely used in the gilded confines of the Four Seasons Hotel. The five kitchens here are the fiefdom of Brooke Vosika, a genial executive chef who has a contagious enthusiasm for red meat. For a big man, Vosika darts around the hotel like a whippet, pausing to instruct a group of sous chefs fiddling with hors d'oeuvres, peeking into the dry-aged steak closet, proudly slicing off a nib of house-cured heirloom ham. His Bristol burger has, for years, been considered one of the city's greats.

"It's a pretty fine grind," says Vosika, holding up a pinch of smooth, pink paste. This is mulched Brandt chuck—a sweet, corn-fed beef popularized by steakhouses like Grill 23. It smells clean enough to brush your teeth with. Even though it's 15 percent fat, the meat is so nicely churned that it doesn't show a speck of lard. One of Vosika's many underlings weighs out eight ounces of the paste, slams it into a plastic mold, and pats it into a perfect disc. Then a shower of sea salt, cracked pepper and a 500-degree grill. At once, the meat starts to smoke. Four minutes of furious burn per side, a minute in the oven, and the patty is ready for its toasted brioche.

WITH ITS BOUTIQUE MEAT AND PEDIGREED PICKLES, IT'S THE STEAMING FANTASY OF EVERY SUBURBAN MAN WITH A SPATULA.

Everything about the Four Seasons kitchens is enormous, from a garbage composter that looks like a conquering cyborg to the hillocks of raw shrimp. The burger is no exception. Dressed with house-made pickles, Grafton cheddar and an optional cap of applewood-smoked bacon, it's a strapping, workman's burger, sweating in its bun. Unlike the other burgers I've eaten, the meat has a crisp, black char, giving it a nip of carbon. But the middle is deep pink and unctuous, with a faint tang of brine. It's as traditional as a bacon cheeseburger from the backyard grill, which is exactly what it is, in an idealized form. The Bristol, with its boutique meat and pedigreed pickles, is the steaming fantasy of every suburban man with a spatula.

"People want something comfort-driven," Vosika says. That's why the Bristol's Wednesday "Burgers and Burgundy" pairing series gets so crowded. Bejacketed customers can order a burger with goat cheese, garlic and dried tomatoes, or one with Mornay sauce and egg. Or, this being the Four Seasons, one crowned with foie gras. But it's the original that sells 2,000 burgers per month at a cost of $20, including truffle fries.

"We believe in the heritage of what we do," Vosika says. And Bostonians, the Bristol knows, are willing to pay for tradition.

A FEW BLOCKS UP the road at Mistral, chef Mitchell Randall is retooling a burger that was already beloved by knowing gluttons. Mistral is an exclusive French-Mediterranean venue marked by gentle lighting, Provençal pottery and dover sole meunière. Beef-eaters have long since sniffed out its late-night menu, rifling past the tenderloin pizza and classic escargot for the Niman Ranch burger. While launching Mistral's new brunch menu in October, Randall decided to tweak the dish.

"I'm a straight-up burger guy, yeah," says Randall, who looks it. Laconic, with cropped red hair, a soul patch and a businesslike set to his jaw, Randall is the sort of chef who uses his bare hands to plate rosemary fries a few seconds out of the oil. His kitchen is silent except for the blacksmith clank of prep time, and the odd barked question. "Mitch, can we buy a new bread knife?" calls a sous chef on the phone with someone at Crate & Barrel.

"Tell him to get two," Randall grunts. "And a Japanese mandoline."

Mistral's reinvented burger is built according to Randall's personal tastes. Prime sirloin in an 85–15 blend from Kinnealey Meats, caramelized red onions, foraged mushrooms, cheese, house-cured bacon and, instead of ketchup and mayo, a roasted tomato aioli.

"Never push down on a burger, it's a huge peeve of mine," Randall says. "Squeezes the juices out." He grills the meat without any talk of convection ovens or "finishing," and gives it an occasional quarter turn. Weighing 10 ounces, it's an aggressive patty. When it's cooked, he plates the beast on toasted brioche, melts two slices of a gentle Gruyère, laces it with browned onions and mushrooms, and ends with three strips of roast bacon, crossed like a Union Jack. The structure is so steep that it requires six-inch toothpicks to keep it erect.

"I didn't want anything to overpower the meat and the mushrooms," he says. Nothing does. Bisected, the patty is rare and luscious, the chanterelles woodsy as truffles. And while the burger halves have to be eaten sideways, like tacos, the red juice never escapes the bread. Randall leaves me at the bar to hunch over my meal in private, like a suspicious coyote.

Mistral's dining room is silent except for the sweep of a janitor's broom and a smooth drum of rain on the windows. These are arched and fretted with scrollwork, looking as if they've been hoisted from some summery estate in Avignon. They ought to overlook fields of warm lavender and fig. Here, planted in the gritty wash of a Boston squall, they seem fragile, unsuited to the times. But for the moment it's warm and clean behind the glass. My watch ticks toward noon.

In a few minutes, my plate, too, is empty save for a little chain of dripped fat, crumbs and blood. The dish is priced at $18, not counting the unseen dollars. Most American beef carries a cost in industrialized stockyards, of growth hormones and long-distance cattle cars, of government corn subsidies and sinking water tables. To say nothing of the coronary aftermath in such a splendor of meat. It is, after all, an expensive lunch.

But it was delicious while it lasted. ✖✖✖

SPRINGS ETERNAL

REMEMBER sending your slinky flopping down the stairs as a kid? Lisa Greenfield's latest public-art installment offers a fresh take on such child's play. Dubbed "Coil/Recoil," it's composed of 400 multicolored slinkies hanging from the Summer Street overpass above A Street. On display through Dec. 3, the dangling toys are more than just a visual display: they're a metaphor for Fort Point's (and America's) inherent resiliency. That, and they prove we're tickled by very simple pleasures. KARL VANDER WIELDE

Felt Better

Street Smarts

When trying to recapture your youth, you're more likely to play beer pong than to watch Sesame Street. But Avenue Q reinvents the show as a musical with an adult sensibility. Using puppets and jaunty songs, the plot centers on Princeton, a young man who moves to New York City and encounters a group of eccentric neighbors. Instead of repeating the ABCs, these colorful pals sing raunchy ditties that dole out life lessons like "The Internet Is for Porn" and "Everyone's a Little Bit Racist." See it at the Colonial Theatre Nov. 17–22, where the letter of the day is Q.

Antichrist ★★ Half genius, half huckster, Danish filmmaker Lars Von Trier too often lets some fascinating heretical notions fall victim to his provocateur posturing. The controversial Antichrist is both Von Trier's least interesting movie and also his most viscerally pulverizing. This time around he's all audacity, all the time, and even if the film's line of philosophical inquiry is downright laughable, the wily bastard is almost gifted enough to pull it off. Almost. Willem Dafoe and Charlotte Gainsbourg star as a married couple reeling from their toddler's accidental death. Retreating to a creaky country cottage, embarrassingly christened Eden, the two fall into a mutually destructive rut of bad therapy, sado-masochistic sex, talking animals and hideous sequences of genital mutilation. Von Trier is riffing on some lame, pretentious angle wherein Dafoe's rational "Man" loses his battle to domesticate Gainsbourg's feral "Womanhood" amid the twisted power of "Nature," yet there are images that will haunt your dreams. It's easy to snicker at and impossible to shake off. (At Kendall Square.)

Bright Star ★★★ The unlikely, inevitably doomed love affair between poet John Keats and fashionista Fanny Brawne might sound like the fodder of teary romance novels or tedious Masterpiece Theater episodes, but writer/director Jane Campion is after something else entirely. Campion, a doggedly idiosyncratic artist best known for The Piano, remains in awe of harsh landscapes and rumpled costumes. Often filmmakers embalm their period pieces with golden lighting and auspicious production design. Campion goes the other way, wrestling Keats' idealized lyrical interludes into a grimy, matter-of-fact reality. I always say you know a movie is working if you start to feel its weather, and Bright Star made me put my jacket back on. Sadly, Keats is a bit of a drip. Played by I'm Not There's Ben Whishaw, he comes off as a mopey emo-boy. Better are Abbie Cornish's obstinate, impassioned Fanny and Paul Schneider's revelatory supporting turn as Keats' boorish, protective patron. Still, nothing can top this movie's tactile sense of place. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Capitalism: A Love Story ★★ Michael Moore's latest muddled provocation feels like a flabby greatest-hits tour from a band all too aware it's become irrelevant. Moore has basically been making the same movie over and over again since his razor-sharp 1989 debut Roger & Me, and the shtick has worn awfully. Again, we've got the cheeky use of old movie footage, grossly oversimplified explanations of complex events, ironic music cues and a condescending voiceover narration. As always, Moore steps in front of the camera for a few grandstanding stunts that only end up harassing security guards and other working people he claims to champion. Taking aim at the odious financial skullduggery that capsized our economy, Moore trots out a string of disconnected outrages, extracting pathos from the victims and wagging his finger at the higher-ups. By the end, even Moore seems to have given up, admitting that he's tired of doing this and something needs to change. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

District 9 ★★★ With wit and originality to burn, writer/director Neill Blomkamp's scrappy little debut begins as a satirical mockumentary regarding a Johannesburg refugee camp full of crustacean-like aliens nicknamed "prawns." Stranded some 20 years ago when their mothership stalled out over South Africa, these ghastly-looking creatures suffer an institutionalized racism that smartly, if not subtly, skewers the country's history of apartheid. Sharlto Copley stars as a bumbling bureaucrat from a Halliburton-esque conglomerate charged with relocating the prawns to a newer yet even more dismal camp. Copley's such a hilarious, ineffectual blowhard that District 9 calls to mind the original, BBC version of The Office, except with aliens. Alas, the movie drops the documentary angle after the first act and settles into routine shoot-'em-up territory. The action is propulsive and often ghoulishly funny, but the movie deflates as it goes along. After you've watched a doomed alien race become obsessed with cat food and Nigerian prostitutes, gunfights aren't as engrossing. (In the suburbs.)

An Education ★★ ½ In what's sure to be Roman Polanski's favorite film of the year, dazzling newcomer Carey Mulligan stars as a 16-year-old schoolgirl who falls under the sway of Peter Sarsgaard's suave 30-something hepcat in

THE FIRST CASUALTY OF Oscar season arrives early with Amelia.

There's no better way to land an Academy Award nowadays than by playing a famous dead person. Whether you're Jamie Foxx (Ray Charles), Nicole Kidman (Virginia Woolf), Cate Blanchett (Katharine Hepburn), Philip Seymour Hoffman (Truman Capote), Reese Witherspoon (June Carter), Forest Whitaker (Idi Amin), Sean Penn (Harvey Milk) or Marion Cotillard (Edith Piaf), your best bet is going familiar and going deceased.

And so the troubled life and times of America's first-female aviator presents a story overflowing with promise. Amelia Earhart was a restless, fascinating character who broke through boundaries of all sorts with reckless abandon. Earhart's tale begs for an iconoclastic telling—a crazy adventure turning genre formulas and preconceived notions on their heads.

Instead, Mira Nair has directed the safest, most boring movie imaginable. The film reminded me of one of my old Catholic catechism books about the lives of saints. It's Our Lady of the Sacred Transcontinental Flight, except duller than you could imagine, considering the source material.

It's an odd accident of fate that Hilary Swank has won two Academy Awards and is thus the most esteemed actress of her generation without displaying the slightest bit of range. She has exactly one mode for all her roles: a gee-whiz sense of tomboy wonder that, when contrasted with impending doom à la Boys Don't Cry or Million Dollar Baby, allows a natural pathos to take root. In Amelia, we already know what's going to happen, so maybe she should bring a little texture to the role besides the "Aw, shucks" attitude? Not a chance.

Swank makes Earhart dull, which is no small feat considering how rebellious this American life really was. By all accounts, Earhart was a prickly, horny number, carrying on with her husband (Richard Gere, in his sad, Unfaithful cuckold mode) and Ewan McGregor's dashing

It's the kind of film where the audience is congratulated for recognizing historical signposts, even when they're planted like landmines.

Gene Vidal (thus allowing the movie to stop cold for his toddler to complain about how he hates being named Gore).

Yes, it's the kind of film where the audience is congratulated for recognizing historical signposts, even when they're planted like landmines.

Swank and Gere are stranded, stuck doing crazy 1930s movie accents that can't help but alienate the audience. She always sounds like a bad Katharine Hepburn pull-string doll, and he sounds eerily like a Turner Classic movie played at the wrong speed.

McGregor, for his part, bobbles his head around and apes Obi-Wan, once again proving that Scottish actors shouldn't bother attempting accents. Even if you're Sean Connery pretending to be a Russian submarine commander, just go with what you've got. We'll get over it, eventually.

Amelia runs through a Wikipedia listing of Earheart's accomplishments, never summoning a point of view or even an angle on any of them. Gabriel Yared's score soars and bleats in an orchestral splendor that reminds you what a terrific job John Barry did in Out of Africa but never discovers an identity of its own.

There's no danger in these flights, just glossy pans over the planes, thanks to Stuart Dryburgh's exceedingly competent cinematography. The whole movie is a collection of lavish moving parts buffed down to the point where there isn't any life left. Eventually I just wanted Amelia's plane to crash so I could go home already.

Once upon a time, Nair directed the rambunctious Monsoon Wedding, which was recently re-released on a Criterion Collection DVD. It's a boisterous, joyful film that pays so much attention to life bustling within the margins that comparisons to my hero Robert Altman are entirely earned. (It's that good; rent it.) By contrast, her Amelia reeks of studio interference and is so phony, I wonder if Altman would've been able to sit through it. ✖✖✖ gloomy, post-war Britain. Adapted by novelist Nick Hornby from Lynn Barber's memoir, the movie takes a tender look back at statutory rape as a rite of passage, and it's a testament to some fine performances that the film only feels icky in retrospect. There's nobody better than Hornby at dissecting all the ways people like to define themselves through their tastes and fascinations, but in nearly every other respect, his screenplay is too fussy and neat for its own good. This is a very polite, middlebrow view of what must've actually been an extremely messy affair. Director Lone Scherfig keeps everything humming pleasantly along, with even the inevitable betrayals and recriminations occurring at a genteel pitch. It's as if all the characters are afraid to raise their voices. The feel-good final reel is almost unforgivable. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Fame ★ ½ It's a sad sign of how dumbed down and sanitized teen movies have grown when you find yourself longing for the "gritty realism" of Alan Parker's original Fame. Parker's version may have been gaudy and overproduced in that totally '80s way, but at least it had a bit of an edge to it. This misguided remake scrubs away all the conflicts, leaving a bland crew of students at New York City High School for the Performing Arts to negotiate their mole-hill–sized problems in some sort of sunny, alternate universe where nothing ever really seems to be at stake. The closest we get to drama is when Naturi Naughton longs to sing hip-hop, but her disapproving dad demands that she play classical piano. Allison Burnett's script skimps on scenes of actual learning and training in favor of CW storylines. Even that fiendishly catchy title song has been rendered inert, with all the zing remixed out of it. (In the suburbs.)

(500) Days of Summer ★★ ½ You can tell from the title's pointless parentheses—and the fact that the female lead is indeed regrettably named Summer—that this debut from music video director Marc Webb has no shortage of the cutesy indie quirk that usually causes this critic to retch in his popcorn bag. But a funny thing happens on the way to Juno territory, as the film keeps alternating between twee, look-at-me set pieces and lacerating truths not often depicted in romantic comedies. Joseph Gordon-Levitt falls head-over-heels for wide-eyed Zooey Deschanel, and the screenplay by Scott Neustadter and Michael Weber shuffles their ill-fated courtship into jarring, haphazardly juxtaposed days of blissful puppy love, waning interest and abject misery. It's basically He's Just Not That Into You for boys—with half of the running time spent warning you about the dangers of overidealizing your object of desire, and the other half settling for banal, sitcommy tropes like the wise-beyond-her-years kid sister. It's a shame the movie keeps sheepishly backing away from its sharpest insights. (In the suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potterverse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (In the suburbs.)

The Hurt Locker ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow delivers an exercise in pure craftsmanship, and perhaps, not coincidentally, the first Iraq War movie worth a damn. This pulse-pounding excursion to the front lines eschews political hand-wringing or sermonizing in favor of following an explosive disposal crew, dismantling deathtraps with a surfeit of rotten luck and sick gallows humor. Jeremy Renner delivers a ferocious, star-making performance as Staff Sergeant James, an adrenaline junkie so heroically spectacular at his job, it hardly matters that the rest of his life is a disaster. A succession of jaw-dropping suspense set-pieces, the first hour of The Hurt Locker initially stakes a claim as one of the greatest war movies ever made. Eventually it settles for merely being one of the best films of the year, as Bigelow and screenwriter Mark Boal take a detour to probe James' peculiar psychopathology, with results that are rewarding, though less visceral in their impact. It's a cruel, bitter and brilliantly assembled picture. (In the suburbs.)

The Informant! ★★★ ½ The exclamation point lets you know exactly how seriously director Steven Soderbergh is taking this true story of corporate malfeasance in the lysine industry. Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Invention of Lying ★ ½ Ricky Gervais, the comic mastermind who gave us the original The Office, as well as HBO's lacerating Extras, tones down his act and sucks up to mainstream romantic comedy fans in this waste of an inspired idea. Set in an alternate universe where nobody is capable of telling a fib, Ricky stars as the one man who learns how to lie. It's a cruel world where folks blab every unpleasant thought crossing their minds. At first, it looks like Gervais might have a smart satire showing just how crucial dishonesty is to our social contracts. Then he accidentally invents religion, and all bets are off. Gervais has no interest in exploring these fascinating comic conceits, instead settling for dull chick-flick formulas as he tries to win the heart of Jennifer Garner. So many ideas are ignored as we wait for the hot babe to fall for the homely schlub who wrote the movie. Who does Ricky think he is, Woody Allen? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded rom-com writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely invites us to watch these characters discover what they do well. (In the suburbs.)

Law Abiding Citizen ★ ½ Stupid even for an exploitative revenge fantasy, this risible hoot stars 300's Gerard Butler as the shattered father of a murdered family. Jamie Foxx's cool, careerist DA cuts a plea agreement, not realizing that Butler will emerge a decade later in full badass mode to declare war on the American justice system. He slaughters federal judges, innocent paralegals, unsuspecting cellmates and anybody else who dares interrupt his tedious "eye-for-an-eye" monologues. The filmmakers try to have their cake and eat it, too: prompting us to cheer for Butler whenever he kills a jerk, but asking for pathos if nicer folks are caught in the crossfire. There's no coherent statement, it's just Seven for Dummies, with Butler's plans growing more absurdly complicated and inadvertently hysterical. Foxx eventually takes up arms and bellows, "F his civil rights!" at which point the audience cheered so loudly that something inside of me died. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paranormal Activity ★ Don't believe the hype. This $15,000 cheapie drew some fleeting attention at festivals a couple years ago and now arrives on a tsunami of tweets thanks to a massive, cynical marketing campaign from Paramount Pictures. Purporting to be the found home video footage of a spectacularly uninteresting couple (Katie Featherson and Micah Sloat), the movie chronicles Katie's troubles with a vaguely defined, undead stalker. This is the laziest, most annoying demon in recent film. What passes for scares involve the creature clomping around the attic like an annoying upstairs neighbor, or every once in awhile turning on the lights in an empty room. Nothing here is novel or even remotely believable. Filmmaker Oren Peli doesn't seem to understand that everyone already saw The Blair Witch Project 10 years ago. The closing shot provides one genuinely great jolt, and it turns out that was only recently added by Steven Spielberg. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Serious Man ★★★★ Grappling with mysteries on a deceptively mundane stage, the latest gem from Joel and Ethan Coen is about the silence of God. Set in a Minneapolis suburb circa 1967, the film stars Michael Stuhlbarg as a college physics professor and human doormat whose entire life begins to crumble one day with the kind of one-thing-after-another momentum that the Coens typically apply to their crime pictures. It's The Book of Job according to a couple of wisenheimer skeptics. Larry's search for celestial explanation leads him up the hierarchy of local rabbis in a series of agonizingly funny and fruitless counseling sessions and rambling parables. As usual, the Coens are being dismissed in some circles as snickering, nihilistic yuksters. But such a reading willfully ignores A Serious Man's deliberately open-ended, questioning structure. In the end, do any of us really have any choice but to accept the mystery? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Getting Jobbed

Michael Stuhlbarg has an existential crisis in A Serious Man.

Up ★★★★ The geniuses at Pixar Animation Studios have done it again. This tall tale of an aging widower (voiced by Ed Asner) flying his house to South America with helium balloons has no right to be so emotionally powerful, but writer/director Pete Docter weighs down the bizarre flights of fancy with sharp human sadness. Somehow the movie manages to include a 13-foot female bird named Kevin, an army of talking dogs and some spectacular action sequences while never losing sight of the moving human drama. Breathtakingly animated, Up has more strange and beautiful images than can possibly be listed here, but perhaps none more so than the crumbling old home, born aloft by thousands of brilliantly colored balloons. It's a ridiculous conceit that pays off rich metaphorical dividends, as our protagonist must learn that it's time to let go. (In the suburbs.)

Where the Wild Things Are ★★★ ½ There's an almost unbearable undertow of melancholy in director Spike Jonze's arty adaptation of Maurice Sendak's 1963 picture book. It's an extraordinarily subjective experience, burrowing so deeply into the child's perspective that the movie works as a Rorschach test for viewers. Some are left completely cold, others in tears. Count me in the latter camp. Drawing out Sendak's sparse sentences to feature length, Jonze and his coscreenwriter Dave Eggers sketch the unhappy world of young Max (Max Records) with swiftness and clarity. Max is a lonely, angry child of divorce, who one night retreats into his imagination, where he becomes king of a wild band of beasts. Each of these marvelous, towering Muppets represents an aspect of Max's troubled home life, and their nonsensical games encompass the gamut of childhood anxieties, with petty jealousies and temper tantrums always circling back around to a gnawing fear of abandonment. It's not a perfect film, but I doubt something so raw and deeply felt ever could be. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Whip It ★★★ Exactly the directorial debut you'd expect from Drew Barrymore, Whip It is clumsy, overly sincere and absolutely adorable. The film is a formula sports picture done right, hitting every tried and true genre cliché with a surfeit of warmth, good feeling and oddball humor. Ellen Page, avoiding sarcastic Juno-isms, stars as an awkward teenage misfit who one day happens upon Austin's riot-grrll, roller-derby community and finally finds her voice. The script is one stock development after another, but what makes the movie work is the care and empathy Barrymore lavishes on her characters. Nothing is cut-and-dry, and there are no villains. Page's disapproving mom attains tragic dimensions thanks to Marcia Gay Harden's tempered performance, and even Juliette Lewis' roller-bully gets an uncommon measure of professional respect. SNL's Kirsten Wiig is in particularly fine form as a sad-eyed single mom who sees all the angles Page is missing. It's a familiar song but sung with conviction. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Zombieland ★★★ Placing third behind Shaun of the Dead and last fall's sly, subversive Zombie Strippers, Ruben Fleischer's Zombieland lacks the serious scares or the meaty subtext of its brethren. But it's still an enjoyable road comedy about the importance of human connection, especially in a post-apocalyptic wasteland riddled with flesh-eating monsters. Mumbling geek Jesse Eisenberg and rowdy redneck Woody Harrelson star as unlikely allies making their way through what's left of the U.S. They happen upon a pair of grifter sisters (Superbad's Emma Stone and Little Miss Sunshine herself, Abigail Breslin), and a dysfunctional family is formed. Clocking in at a brisk 83 minutes, the movie knows how to get in and out before wearing out its welcome. Just be careful how much you read in advance, as nearly a quarter of the film is devoted to a surprising detour involving a special guest star that only a bastard would reveal. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

DAVE LONGSTRETH IS caught short, asking if he can delay an interview for a few hours to finish a project. It turns out to be a large art print that he says involves "compositing a couple of different drawings on top of each other that interact in a way that's hopefully cool."

The mastermind behind Dirty Projectors does much of the same thing with his music as he does with his drawings.

Consider the divergent elements that overlap on the band's brilliant 2009 CD Bitte Orca. There are multipart vocals that ping between R&B swooning and wordless abstraction, African-styled guitar, hip-hop rhythm and Zeppelin-esque stomp, shaped by both classical form and punk spirit.

It's the kind of sonic collage that attracted David Byrne and Björk, who each collaborated with Dirty Projectors this year. And it's methodically worked out by singer/guitarist Longstreth and shared with Amber Coffman (vocals, guitar), Angel Deradoorian (vocals, keyboard, guitar, bass), Haley Dekle (vocals), Nat Baldwin (bass) and Brian Mcomber (drums).

"It's like weaving a basket," says Longstreth, 27. "You can't weave spontaneously, or I guess you could. You could probably weave improvisationally. But you couldn't weave these lines [that way]. It all fits together."

At least it fits together through some marathon rehearsals. "When there's a batch of new material to get through, yeah, you'll have to work," he says. "But it's not all the time, and once you figure it out, it's like riding a bike."

Much of the time goes into the surreal polyphonic patterns of vocal trio Coffman, Deradoorian and Dekle. In "Cannibal Resource," "Remade Horizon" and the newer "When the World Comes to an End," the female voices bob and blur in fractal tag. Longstreth talks about subdividing beats in separate tempos against an even pulse to create that "skittering" effect.

"I love the voice," he says. "It's a direct instrument and you can do anything with it. It's also really fun to sing with other people."

Bitte Orca (which randomly combines "please" in German and "killer whale") offers the group's most accessible outing since Longstreth christened Dirty Projectors in 2003. It includes changeups like Coffman's funky showcase "Stillness Is the Move," which nods to Mariah Carey as much as Björk, and "Two Doves," where Deradoorian croons to folky finger-picking. Past CDs haven't always been that easy to take, given Longstreth's warbling voice and obtuse concepts.

For 2007's Rise Above, Longstreth reimagined Black Flag's punk album Damaged from memory, while 2005's The Getty Address floated a modern opera built around such far-flung subjects as Don Henley and the Aztecs. And rather than work with a defined band, Longstreth would assemble large casts of musicians (including members of Vampire Weekend) to fill out his palette with vocals, strings and wind instruments.

"I wasn't really interested in having a band," Longstreth says. "I thought, 'This should sound this way, and in order to do that, who are the people I should try to have help me?'" Touring changed his view a few years ago, when he decided a more consistent lineup has advantages. His sharply honed sextet plays the Paradise on Nov. 17.

How did he find people both proficient and comfortable with his music? "I don't think anybody in the band is totally comfortable with it," Longstreth says from his Brooklyn home. "But if you put your mind to it, you can accomplish anything! Doc said that in Back to the Future."

Longstreth and his brother Jake (once a Dirty Projector, now a West Coast painter) sowed their artistic future in Connecticut, where their parents moved to start an organic farm. "They're not musicians or artists themselves, but they definitely have a broad, humanist love of art and civilization, and I definitely think they passed that on to my brother and [me]," Longstreth says. "Growing up, we were drawing pictures and trying to figure out Nirvana songs."

Longstreth studied classical composition at Yale, fighting the faculty's rigidity and dropping out to hit the indie-rock trenches. He returned to finish his degree between albums.

"[Music] is really not about technique in opposition to feeling," Longstreth says. "That opposition is something that came with punk, but it's a dead end. There's a lot of great music that sees no opposition between those things." ✖✖✖

Keeping Track

Can I, Really?

With a name beaming with possibility and a sound just as bright, Boston-based You Can Be a Wesley puts listeners in a good state of mind. Big on the local scene, these four BU graduates have been gaining national attention. This past July they appeased their fans and released their first album, Heard Like Us (on vinyl, no less!). Influenced by bands like Pavement and the Pixies, YCBAW is rocking recognizable anthems ("Creatures") with thoughtful and creative lyrics. They'll be making you want to be like them on Nov. 6 at the Middle East and on Nov. 8 at the Eat Your Heart Out Benefit Boston at Church. Adriana Stimola

Books & Poetry

Edited by Nick Altschuller

Everything Unhealthful Is Illuminated

Steak Your Claim If the recent stories of tainted hamburgers didn't quite convince you to drop your Whoppers and Big Macs, Jonathan Safran Foer's Eating Animals might. Without beating a vegan drum, Foer examines the underbelly of the factory-farm industry from the perspective of a struggling omnivore/vegetarian and new father. On Nov. 11, he reads from his nonfiction debut, which combines both memoir and investigative reporting, at Congregation Kehillath Israel in Brookline. Carnivores welcome. Adriana Stimola

Table for Eight

4 men. 4 women. For dinner

MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late 20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table—located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

IT'S NOT CRICKET

Love All

Who knew tennis balls made great centerpieces?

That, and other edifying things, became abundantly clear at Tenacity's tenth anniversary gala, held at the Longwood Cricket Club.

The elegant evening attracted the soignée likes of the Achtmeyers, Alli and Bill, with his daughter, Olivia, the dapper Leroy Walker, the bejeweled Anne Fitzpatrick Cucchiaro, TV talking head Bud Collins and his brother from another mother, Chris Collins, Chestnut Hellions Kasey Kaufman and Michael Horwitz, the super-stylish Erin Gilligan and Hoyle Kim, Fidelity bigwig Roger Servison, boyish blueblood Zenas Crocker and the flawless Susan, and lovable lunachick Olivia English, among multitudes more.

Cocktails were served in the clubhouse, and then an elaborate dinner took place underneath a huge tent, with long tables set with the aforementioned tennis balls and Lazy Susans piled high with heaping platters of deliciousness.

Overheard on the way from the cocktail reception to dinner:

"So does anyone actually play cricket here?"

"No."

Which sort of begs the question: If it had a golf course, would they call it Longwood Hunting and Fishing Club?

Tyin' on the Feedbag

It was like a culinary tour of Asia minus the jetlag when the Mandarin Oriental hosted the Silk Road Gala to benefit the Asian Task Force Against Domestic Violence.

Celebrity chefs like Ming Tsai, Ken Oringer, Lydia Shire, Michael Schlow, Ting San and Joanne Chang created delectable dishes that were enjoyed by a crowd that included megaphilanthropists Joan and Ted Cutler, Patriots great Joe Andruzzi, casting agent to the stars Angela Peri, design guru Meichi Peng, laugh-riot Marjorie Clapprood and her other half, Chris Spinnazolla, hotel hottie Susanne Hatje and the oh-so-stylish Joanne Choi, among others.

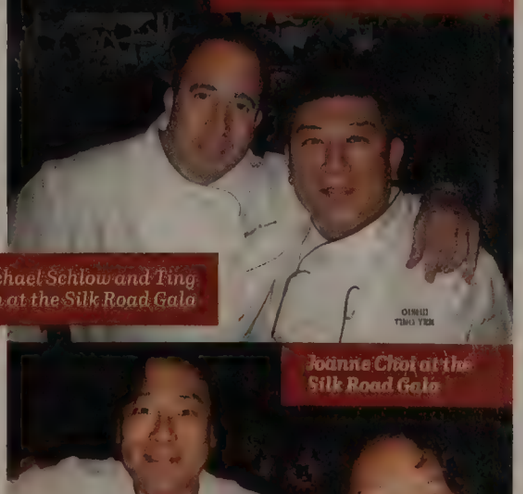
Besides the fabulous food and company, the ballroom was decorated with 1,000 origami cranes, which not only had a magical effect but in Japanese lore means that a wish will be granted. In this case, an end to domestic violence.



Amen to that. But can you say, "papercut"?

Lenny and Jenn Clarke at the Storybook Ball

Kasey Kaufman at Tenacity

Sukey Forbes Bigham at the Storybook Ball

Michael Schlow and Ting San at the Silk Road Gala

Joanne Choi at the Silk Road Gala

Ming Tsai at the Silk Road Gala

The gala had a Jungle Book theme, which some took literally.

Going Ape

And they lived happily ever after? More like, "And they woke up the next morning with a shattering hangover."

Never mind. The Storybook Ball, held at the Westin Waterfront to benefit Mass. General Hospital for Children, is a super glitzy, everyone-who's-anyone affair, and everyone was there.

This year, the gala had a Jungle Book theme, which some took more literally than others. Fashion avatar Lisa Pierpont wore a leopard-print coat and a necklace that looked like it was made out of lions' teeth, but it was blonde Brahmin Sukey Forbes Bigham who took the proverbial cake, wearing jeans, a pink, silk sash and diamonds, with a taxidermied bobcat around her neck.

Among the many wildly glamorous others: celebrity auctioneer Lenny Clarke and his singer/songwriter/charter-boat–captain wife, Jenn, Caribbean goddess Colette Philips and her equally dazzling cochairs, Remy Stressenger and Katie Ronan, brunette bombshell Maggie Gold-Seelig and her crushable husband, Jonathan, the swanlike Rachael Goldfarb, design genius Manuel de Santaren, stunning blonde Kathy Burns and her other half, Michael Greeley, über-talented chef Will Gilson, the grand poobah of pub owners Michael Conlon, silver fox Donald Nelson, couturier to the stars Michael De Paolo, the diamond-bedecked Patty Ribakoff squired by her other half, Charles, the dewy Maribeth Brostowski, blueblooded beauty Elizabeth Sprague and many others.

Carnival games featuring fancy prizes lined the periphery of the party and offered an alternative to burning up the dance floor, as well as fodder for some amusing exchanges:

"I wanted to play Whack-A-Mole, but the line was too big," said one guy, to which an old friend responded, "I remember a time when you loved big lines."

However, the funniest remark came from the woman who won a $300 gift certificate to the Newbury Street fashion mecca Serenella and said, "This gift certificate is going to cost my husband several thousand dollars." ×××

Gaga Over Gifts

Seems like you can't walk a block without bumping into a stroller carrying a Sophie. I'm talking about a rubber giraffe here, not a little girl. There's really no accounting for infant taste—Sophie's essentially a dog toy for babies, and teethers go gaga for her. Give one to a niece or a nephew, and watch the spit fly.

That enthusiasm earned Sophie a spot in our annual holiday-shopping guide. She shares the honor with cool presents including patterned tights and whiskey rocks, headphones and cuff links, peppercorns and shave gel. The common theme? They're all from local stores like Flock, whose owner Danielle Kupsc graces the cover.

If you want to see your friends drool, buy them a Sophie. Just kidding… bake them cookies! Recipes for five sweets appear in this issue. Wrap 'em up, and you've got a gift right there. Which leaves more time for sitting around and drinking Champagne—my formula for surviving the season.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

MOST MOTHERS AND daughters bond over shopping bags. Danielle Kupsc and her mother, Lisa, bond over their South End boutique, called Flock. "We do all the buying together," says Danielle, 26. "I think of what I would wear out for a evening, and my mom looks for things she would wear." The result i store that doesn't skew to a particular age group and carries uncommon labels like Built by Wendy and Stewart Brown. Flock is very much a family venture with Danielle bringing retail experience and her mother well . . . "My mom just likes to shop!"

Team Players

For three years, Alice Warren has worked the premium seating sections at the Garden, having left the bars in the West End behind. But surely sports fans are the same, whether it be the Harp or the Heineken Boardroom. "Oh God, completely different," she corrects. "Much more refined."

So during a Celtics game, you can sip on the LUCKY LEPRECHAUN ↑ ($12), made with vodka, coconut rum, peach and green-apple schnapps, and sour mix. It's a cross between an apple martini and Warren's invention called the Italian Surfer. "I took the two and thought, 'How can I make this way better than it already is?'" she explains. It's sweet, but finishes sharp. Sounds like something Big Baby would like. For the puckhead, options include the ← RAGING BEAR ($12), which, as a Mudslide of sorts, is a Gentle Ben kind of drink, but there's some Patron XO Café for bite. "And the chocolate shavings kind of remind me of fur," Warren describes. Those go down real easy. Let's hope that won't prove symbolic for the Bruins.

Polenta Perfected

Save descriptors like "creamy" for someone else's polenta. What Prezza's Anthony Caturano does to boiled cornmeal is downright decadent—and that's before he ladles on a robust ragout. In his North End cucina, Caturano transforms this typically gruel-like substance by simmering the grains in equal portions of milk and water for a relatively brief 20 minutes—some recipes call for as long as six hours—showering them with handfuls of Parmesan cheese and stirring in more butter than the chef cares to admit. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Move Over, Australia

A recent blind tasting of Aussie Shiraz left me firmly convinced that any of the examples we sampled in this once-hot category would be a perfectly good choice. For a masochist. I haven't lost faith in the grape, but the big-label Australian producers need to address some style and quality issues. Until they come back, there's always South Africa. Pound for pound, dollar for dollar, this is the best place to look in the world today, other than perhaps Chile, for outstanding and affordable Shiraz—wine that tastes spicy and chocolatey, with smooth textures and mineral accents. Here are some winners:

Master of Wine Sandy Block is vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

Fairview Shiraz Paarl, 2007 ($16, Cirace & Sons, Boston)
A soft, velvety Shiraz with flavors on the border between red and black berries, Fairview is all about cocoa and clove, anise and cinnamon. Low in tannins but high in fruit extracts, this is a great sipper you can cool down a little bit and just quaff, or serve with a bowl of chili.

Guardian Peak Shiraz Western Cape, 2006 ($14, Marty's, Newton)
Somewhat earthier, more in a structured Rhône Valley mode, Guardian Peak expresses the leathery, slightly herbal, deep, dark side of Shiraz. It's layered with ripe, almost sweet, fleshy grape flavor and a liberal dash of pepper. You'll enjoy this with casual fare like steak tips or burgers.

Brampton Shiraz Coastal Region, 2007 ($15, Marty's, Newton)
This has smoky fruit galore, with an engaging cedary, red-berry aroma. It's ripe, lush and edgy with a long, juicy finish, more Australian in style than French, but with lovely balance. It's an all-purpose wine that works wonders with roast chicken as well as grilled salmon and tuna.

Going Out

SLINGS OF FORTUNE

By using reclaimed wood and metal and incorporating found pieces—like a safe from the 1800s and original corsets from the garment store that housed it—Stoddard's Fine Food & Ale hearkens back to the days before Prohibition. Not to give the wrong impression. With a cocktail list 50 entries long, Stoddard's drowns the idea of temperance in a cascade of daiseys, rickeys, fizzes and flips.

"Initially, it was going to be a flat-out pub, but as we kept digging, everything fell into place," explains partner Frankie Stavrianopoulos. "The food, the drinks, everything is going to be screaming that era." So now in a foundation built more than 150 years ago, there'll be a private club with a bare-knuckle boxing theme inspired by an article found buried in the rafters. And in the 150-capacity dining area, set to open on Dec. 3, an Otis elevator pulley will haul kegs of cask-conditioned beer. Cocktail historian David Wondrich even helped craft the drink menu.

Mark Cina, formerly of Rendezvous and Craigie on Main, will hold court in a carriage house turned kitchen, preparing dishes that marry the old and the new. "The rabbit ballotine is a classic, but it's fun to play around with classic French and hearty American stuff like chicken pot pie," Cina says. "We'll have things that are unique, but that also hit home as well"—things like house-cured meats. It's vintage as cutting edge.

Impersonals

IN THE DOGHOUSE

TO THE "OWNER" OF THE CHOCOLATE LAB LEFT IN THE SLEET OUTSIDE OF DRAGON CHEF IN BRIGHTON CENTER ON SUNDAY, OCT. 18: You, sir (or madam), are a jackass. I don't care if you got hungry walking the dog. I don't care if you're dogsitting and don't know how to properly care for an animal. I don't even care if you asked to keep the dog indoors while your order was cooked and the restaurant owners refused. You don't keep a beautiful animal like that outside in 32-degree, blustery weather to soak through and possibly catch pneumonia. You just don't. You could've called your order ahead, had them deliver, driven over, any number of sensible and not-cruel options. I was waiting at Athan's hoping you'd walk by, so I could either give you a piece of my mind or maybe chain you to a bike rack for 15 minutes and see how you liked it, you idiotic and careless buffoon. Blind luck saved your sorry ass. Don't EVER do it again, because I'll come find you next time. And unlike your poor, disrespected pet, my bite far exceeds this bark.

Concerned animal lover

To Katia from the North End:

I want to thank you for going very much out of your way to return my wallet. You have restored my faith in people, and I just want to say you absolutely made my day! I plan to pay forward your good deed. Very grateful Jacquie

To Bostonians:

It was great to see you last night when you came in for dinner. You ate every bite of the delicious meal prepared for you. And the wine? You polished off the whole bottle. So I can only assume the reason you left such a meager tip was my service? I kept your water glasses full, replenished the bread basket twice. Was there something I did wrong? No, you say. I did everything to your satisfaction and liking. Can you then please explain why you left me less than the customary 15 percent gratuity? You do know that I make $2.63 an hour, and that I rely on tips to pay my bills. Yes, times are difficult with the economy and recession. Your waiter or bartender feels the crunch, too; Bostonians aren't going out as much. But please, remember if your servers take good care of you, take care of them.

Sincerely, your server

WRITERLY ADVICE

Good, bad and ugly critiques

THE TITLE, Mentors, Muses and Monsters, is so ominously apt; student writers seeking recognition from famous teachers may feel like they've been slapped by a rejecting lover. Maud Casey says of an unnamed instructor: "My adoration was of the youthful, big, beating heart worn dangerously on the sleeve variety," leading to a cruel insult. Accomplished novelist Mary Gordon is told at a party by a drunken Elizabeth Hardwick, who has taught, encouraged and brought Gordon into her social scene: "You've never written an interesting sentence in your life." Ouch!

Yet Hardwick bewitches several scribes, including editor Benedict, with the interestingly oblique oddity of her writing style, and her disturbing marriage to crazy-brilliant poet Robert Lowell. Many of these protégés seek to thread their own literary needle with some mystic yarn of their mentors' sensibilities. After Cheryl Strayed receives a near fan-letter from Alice Munro, her literary heart is "pinned and pierced by her, burned and branded by the truth and beauty of her words."

Mentors, Muses & Monsters: 30 Writers on the People Who Changed Their Lives

Edited by Elizabeth Benedict

Benedict, a novelist and nonfiction writer, lives in Boston.

Jay Cantor reveres an appealingly soulful Bernard Malamud and gets respect, and real career help, in return. But a woman writer who lives with Susan Sontag's son reveals Sontag's weirdly dictatorial and arbitrary side, and Annie Dillard—though worshipped by Alexander Chee who says bluntly "I wanted to be her"—exudes a kind of austere narcissism. But whatever justified, or deluded, fascination these writers have toward their teachers, and however much or little reciprocity is granted, they weave riveting tales of their own evolution, sometimes outstripping their mentors. ✖✖✖

STAFFERS SHARE WISE WORDS FROM THEIR MENTORS AND MUSES:

Megan: "Don't use a bulldozer to pick a daisy." JUDITH CRIST

Andrew: "Memorize your declensions and verb forms. There will be a test." MR. WEATHERSPOON, high-school Latin teacher

Nick: "Kill your darlings." WILLIAM FAULKNER

Amanda: "Do what you love, and the money will follow." CLINTON KELLY

Linh: "The best writing is personal." ALLEN GROSSMAN

THANKS?

Chefs talk holiday gifts.

BAD GIFTS—unforgettably bad gifts—happen to everyone, and chefs and restaurateurs are no exception. Years ago, "my sister-in-law gave me a wine-bottle holder carved out of a wooden Dutch shoe," sighs Chris Campbell, noted oenophile and owner of Troquet. "I doubt we still have it, but it could be hidden in the basement."

A poorly chosen cookbook tops the list for Paul O'Connell, chef/owner of Chez Henri: "Someone who worked with me gave me this community cookbook from somewhere in Georgia with cheesy recipes—pressure-cooked chicken between layers of white bread with frozen peas and carrots, and Jell-O molds with marshmallows and jelly beans," he says. "Needless to say, I threw it away." As for the giver: "She doesn't work for me anymore."

On the other hand, O'Connell is enthusiastically appreciative of the best presents he's received. "Nice knives, from my ex. And 15 years ago, Todd English gave me a really nice copper pot that I still use at Chez Henri."

If you're shopping for an impressive gift that's food- or wine-related, a tight budget won't limit you. Campbell says another relative gave him a winner: "VinTemp, about the size of a ChapStick container," he says. "It reads the exact temperature of the wine right through the glass." Note: VinTemp retails for about $30.

More extravagant was last year's Christmas present to chef Chris Coombs from his business partner at Dbar in Dorchester. "Brian Piccini gave me a subscription to Bacon-of-the-Month Club, and it's awesome, like Christmas every month," he says.

What's on wish lists this year? Coombs is setting his sights on expansion: "A second restaurant like Dbar!" And over at UpStairs on the Square, Mary-Catherine Deibel knows just what she wants: "Dinner for two at L'Arpège in Paris for Christmas. Do you know anyone who'd like to give that to me?"

A NEW MILLENNIUM

North 26 aims to break the hotel mold.

TOURIST CENTRAL Dishes like the sirloin steak do more than satisfy the masses.

HOTEL RESTAURANTS face a challenge. Their function, in most cases, is ancillary to the principal business, which can lead to cut corners in the dining room. And yet some venues—the Boston Harbor's Meritage and the Eliot's Clio spring to mind—aspire to, and often achieve, the exceptional. Whether or not North 26, the new restaurant in the Millennium Bostonian Hotel, shares this aspiration, its best hope for success is to serve good food at reasonable prices given its tourist-heavy location on the Freedom Trail. This may not make it the foodie mecca that Lydia Shire, Jasper White and Gordon Hamersley helped create at Seasons in this same hotel two decades ago, but having White protégé Brian Flagg at the helm could certainly enrich the neighborhood.

The restaurant's physical setting, though attractive, has a slight institutional look, as you might expect given the Millennium backdrop. Booths and banquettes with beige, leather upholstery and blond, wooden tables are standard fare, but stainless-steel and Art Deco tableware add a note of refinement. Unfortunately, noise reverberating off hardwood floors, paneling and large windows make it difficult to carry on a conversation at the larger tables.

The best appetizers I tried were the roasted Woodbury clam pozole ($9) and the mussels ($10). The trio of clams was gently steamed in a marvelous mole of chilies and cilantro, and enriched with bacon and hominy, providing a symphony of sweet, salty, smoky and pleasantly fishy flavors. The mussel broth was in the same league, redolent of roasted garlic, rosemary butter and white wine. A generous portion of cumin-roasted lamb ribs ($12), fall-off-the-bone tender, came with a garnish of olive-and-pepper salad, which made up for the piquancy lacking in the meat due to under-spicing. The least successful of the appetizers, braised rabbit dumplings ($11), promised shallots and tarragon, but to my palate they were A.W.O.L. One member of our party pronounced the flavor "insipid," while I was more annoyed by the pasty dough.

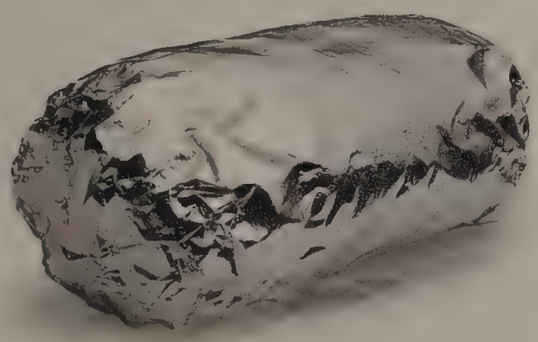
Braised brussel sprouts



The clear winner among the entrées was the thick sirloin steak ($26), which came tender and perfectly medium-rare. Al dente green beans, a well-constructed potato cake and sautéed mushrooms made the perfect partners to this prix-qualité triumph. Second only to the steak, the breast of Giannone chicken ($22)—a Statler cut, meaning boneless with the drumette attached—had been pan-cooked to a succulent turn, and together with a garnish of garlicky potatoes, tiny buttery turnips, parsnips, carrots and poached cranberries, made an excellent ensemble. Roasted venison ($26), on the other hand, proved dry and lacked discernable flavor. But the toasted caraway spaetzle and the braised Brussels sprouts were a delight (order the latter as a side dish). Finally, the New England shellfish stew ($27) played to rave reviews, with enough clams, lobster, mussels, squid and sausage to provide a taste of the region for the entire table.

From the short but well-chosen wine list, a 2007 White Haven sauvignon blanc ($45) from New Zealand's Marlborough region was a terrific accompaniment to the seafood, and a fruity 2004 El Coto Crianza Rioja ($27) provided good acidity. Desserts ($6-$8) included an apple tart with tender pastry and cinnamon crumbles, and a "Boston cream whoopie pie" (an enhanced Ring Ding with vanilla-bean pastry cream and dark-chocolate sauce).

The waiters were a little inexperienced—I'm always chagrined when staff members clear the plate of one diner while his tablemates are still eating—but they provided attentive service and helpful recommendations. On both of our visits, we were made to feel like guests rather than mere customers. Good hospitality, the essence of the innkeeper calling, should certainly help this restaurant succeed. ✖✖✖

OUR PORK IS RAISED RESPONSIBLY. YOU CAN EAT IT HOWEVER THE HELL YOU WANT.

Our pigs are exceptional. It's not like they're doing long-form division or anything, but compared to the rest of the pork industry our pigs are pretty darn special. You see, all of our pork is raised naturally. Most of it on family farms where the pigs are allowed to roam, root and follow their natural instincts. They are raised in deeply bedded pens or outside. They never receive growth hormones or antibiotics and they are fed a healthy vegetarian diet. Basically, the pigs are allowed to be more piggy. And piggier pigs are happier pigs, which ultimately leads to better-tasting pork.

It's not cheap raising pigs this way, but we're convinced it's the right thing to do. And we don't stop there. We use as many responsibly raised ingredients as we can find, because it's better for the animals, better for the farmers, better for the environment and better for you.

The Good Source-O-Meter helps us evaluate where we are on our quest for responsibly raised ingredients. We are constantly evaluating how each ingredient we use can be raised with more respect for the animal, the environment and the farmer. When it comes to pork, we feel pretty good about where we are, but the quest to get better is never over and every day we take another step in the right direction.

AIR TIME

My debut as a radio opinionator

Matjaz Boncina

'JUST PRETEND YOU'RE IN A bar talking with your friends," says Tom, a producer at 96.9 WTKK. I'm in the studio with Michael Graham as a guest on his That's a Wrap week-in-review show. And thus begins my fledgling career as a talk-radio pundit.

I was apprehensive about accepting the invitation to appear on the show. For one thing, I tend to mispronounce certain words. I get it in my head that arugula is pronounced, "arr-oog-you-la," and then I say it that way until someone corrects me. That someone is usually Heather, who points, laughs and summons other people to join in the taunting—"Hey, ask him to say 'arugula!'" Heather and I have agreed to disagree on the pronunciation of "scallop." Certain words are just disasters in waiting—I think everyone has an embarrassing story about the first time they read the word "chaos" aloud.

In general, there's not a lot of upside for a writer going on a radio show. If you've got something to plug, then you use the air time to tell the audience about your upcoming appearance/book/Faneuil Hall interpretive street dance. But otherwise, you're risking career destruction just because you like the sound of your own voice. Consider that professional radio guys regularly blurt out mind-farts that get them fired: What might happen to someone like me, who's unused to articulating my ideas in real time? I mean, I had to rewrite this paragraph for half an hour just to make it PG-13 for all you mothe—see, there I go.

Also, Michael Graham, like 96.9 in general, caters to a conservative audience. I'm not Mr. Hardcore Liberal, but I suspect that my views on subjects like gay marriage (why would anyone care?) and climate change (just because it's warm in your living room this afternoon doesn't refute the fact that the Northwest Passage is open for shipping) skew to the left of anyone in the WTKK building. But no matter. Opposing views are what make for interesting conversations. If everyone agrees on everything, you have a tedious echo chamber of congratulatory inanity. Every Whoopie needs a Hasselbeck.

It turns out that the discussion isn't as hostile as I'd anticipated. Since the whole idea is to have an entertaining conversation, an argumentative parry doesn't necessarily need to be answered directly. In fact, if you can think of a joke to deflect it, all the better. For example, Graham brings up a study that purports that a dog emits more carbon than a car. "Therefore," he says, "If you care about the environment, you should eat your dog. Otherwise, you're a hypocrite." I counter that my dog has a catalytic converter, so he's cool. Then I ask, "Environment aside, aren't there enough other reasons to spend money on alternative fuel research? Aren't national security and the economy good enough reasons on their own?"

This, to my mind, is the basic failure of lefty climate rhetoric: instead of talking about a polar bear drifting out to sea on a lonely iceberg while a whale weeps, talk about everyone making more money while flipping the finger to Saudi Arabia and driving a sweet electric/algae-ethanol-fueled Ford F-250. I say something along the lines of, "Forget the environment for a moment—wouldn't it be awesome if we gassed up our muscle cars with fuel from good ol' U.S. algae farms? Fossil fuels are a finite resource—everyone agrees on that. So why would anyone be against trying to find alternatives?" I'll say it now: If you're against algae research, you're probably a terrorist.

Not all the topics are strictly political. We talk about Balloon Boy, the guy in Worcester who built a giant treehouse, the Sudbury wannabe Taliban guy and kids who got busted for a party via photos on Facebook. It turns out that I have very strong opinions on all these topics. I'm pro-treehousee and anti-incriminating-photos-on-Facebook, for example. At some point I advocate for nuclear energy. I'm out of control, drunk on the power of the microphone. Listen to me, Boston, and I shall tell you why it's OK for cheerleaders to bake cookies for football players!

I'd started off a little shaky, but by the end of the segment, I feel comfortable at the mike and with my role as designated liberal foil. (At one point, Graham demands, "Why do you want Gitmo prisoners to move to Amherst?" as if I'd flown to Cuba and personally extended everyone an invitation to come get gay-married while having abortions and repealing the second amendment.)

Basically, being on the radio is fundamentally similar to writing a column—you're foisting your views on a large number of people who can't talk back. It's awesome that way. I might even try it again in the future, but I'll need to pick a week when there are some juicy topics. Ones that don't involve arugula. ✖✖✖

MY LITTLE LIST

Recommendations for reading, eating and more.

HERE'S MY ANNUAL compilation of favorites from the past year in the arts, dining and wherever my weirdness pushes me. The list begins with my alma mater. People either love or hate Harvard for lots of reasons. ("Didn't let my kid in; I'll never give again," etc.) Regardless of your stance, rent the recent documentary Harvard Beats Yale 29-29. This was the legendary 1968 match for the Ivy League championship between two undefeated teams. Harvard scored 16 points in the final 42 seconds to deadlock the game. The movie flows like a thrilling mystery, surprising even though you know the outcome. Because it's about character, the sports footage is punctuated by interviews with players on both sides reminiscing about their youth, their backgrounds, the Vietnam years, their bumps in the road since 1969. It's a chronicle of the hippie generation, and the knocks and triumphs we all face over the years. As a character study and a glimpse into dark and light mirrors, it's priceless. Watch it, if you have a soul and a brain.

I thumb through old, favorite books periodically to see if they still hold their magic. Every Christmas Eve I read a few chapters of John O'Hara's Appointment in Samarra. It made a profound impression on me years ago, when all I wanted to be was a novelist, and O'Hara was one of my heroes. Amazing to me that he was right up there, according to some critics, with Hemingway and Fitzgerald, but now is almost forgotten by the reading public. The great writer, George V. Higgins, sadly gone too young, also loved O'Hara's work. Higgins produced a novel every year for years, no mean task. But his first, The Friends of Eddie

Coyle, is, in my opinion, one of the 50 best American novels of the 20th century. Many of today's thriller and mystery writers credit Higgins as their biggest inspiration. For you aspiring writers, here's O'Hara speaking to a college audience: "An author who does not write good dialogue is not a first-rate author." And Higgins answered this quote by saying, "And he knew something else, too: All fiction is gossip, and the best of it is collected by eavesdropping." These guys are special.

Another exemplary author is Robert Parker, most famous for his Spenser series of detective novels. The best people in any field constantly reinvent themselves, never letting things get stale. In the last several years, Parker has produced several unusual Western novels, including 2008's Resolution. It will eventually be as good a movie as last season's Appaloosa.

Parker's not the only one to change with the times. The Langham Boston hotel in Post Office Square once seemed a bastion of conservatism, old-world charm in a little black dress. But the hospitality business has suffered with the crunch in the economy, as the American consumer of almost everything (except mac 'n' cheese and sports tickets) has pulled back. In response, Serge Denis, the Langham's stylish manager, has reinvented the hotel's social scene, turning the formal dining room into a magnet for young professionals called Bond. Shaken and stirred, it's full of action into the wee hours. A DJ comes in at 10 pm three nights a week; as the lights dim, and the place fills with dressed-up people, you could almost swear you were in London. Bloody good.

I've heard of Kinky Friedman for years, the satirical country-western songwriter and mystery novelist. But I'd never heard a selection of his songs covered by artists like Willie Nelson and Lyle Lovett (Pearls in the Snow). If you have a sense of irony and wit, and you love your country with dashes of sardonic frenzy, try something Kinky.

My friend, Reggie the Rake, visited recently from London with his friend Jennifer. Reggie is an eternal romantic, looking for love in all the wrong places. Once he served me this bit on Champagne: "The perfect way to drink Champagne is to serve it in silver goblets with your mistress in mid-afternoon at halftime." He grinned and added, "Before changing ends." I suggested he try a few nights at the boutique Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro on Charles Street. The bistro's food, created by chef Jason Bond, is better than ever. In the chilly fall, as evening descends, with the fireplace burning in the bar area, you can imagine yourself in Paris. After dinner, you can take your companion upstairs to one of the sweet guest rooms.

Have a sweet holiday season. ✖✖✖

5 EARLY CELTICS THOUGHTS

Five More Years! As you can imagine, there was no one more ecstatic over Rajon Rondo's extension than this guy (awkwardly pointing at myself). But in the wake of his deal, I'd like to issue a challenge to my unadulterated man crush: Let us in, buddy! Show some emotion. Get fired up on the floor. Acknowledge the crowd. Speak up after a loss! (And if you have time, please unblock my phone number.)

Shelden Steps In So what if he's only the second-best baller in his household? Shelden Williams has paid more dividends over the last month than I expected he would all season! But as great as his run's been, can it survive the return of Big Baby? I just don't see how there's enough room in the rotation for both of them (and that's not even meant to be a fat joke).

Finna Do This Kevin Garnett's value can't be measured by mere statistics, so the fact that his numbers are down isn't a huge, binge-inducing deal. But there's one KG stat that legitimately has me worried: foul-shot attempts. FTAs are a product of confidence and aggression—two trademark KG qualities—and this year's 1.8 FTA a game average shows none of that.

It's the Truth There's no mistaking Paul Pierce's legacy as an all-time Celtics great, but every once in a while, I'll stumble across a piece of information that catches me off guard and puts it all in perspective. For instance, I totally forgot that Pierce played three seasons under Rick Pitino! Hell, that's longer than KG or Ray have played for Doc.

You Should Be Dancing Yeah! Rasheed Wallace and Marquis Daniels are the greatest additions from this past off-season, but the new Gino footage is a very close third. Where the hell did they find that stuff? And most important, is there more? With every new clip, I feel like an archaeologist, piecing together the life of a coked-up dinosaur.

1 ONE BOOK RECOMMENDATION

When the Game Was Ours by Larry Bird, Magic Johnson and Jackie MacMullan. An unbelievable read highlighted by a never-ending string of classic Bird one-liners. For instance, here's his take on his jealous college teammates: "Hell, I'm jealous of them too. I never got to play with Larry Bird." Well done, sir.

3 Potential Transactions

You Know, It's Funny... Just the other day, I was saying to myself, "God, you know what the Red Sox really need? Another slow, injury-prone, over-the-baseball-hill veteran in the lineup!" Enter the latest "Hideki Matsui to Boston" rumors. Coincidence?

I'll Just Come Straight Out With This One I want the Patriots to sign Larry Johnson. Seriously, not only is there still plenty of tread left on his tires, but not even LJ's stupid enough to fumble an opportunity with the Pats. He's no different than Corey Dillon—and if you disagree, Google yourself back to 1998-2004.

Skip to Ty Lue The C's second-unit has been great, but I still believe they'd benefit from the addition of a true point guard. Speaking of which, director of player development Tyronn Lue is only 32, not even a year out of the league, and, if necessary, could easily provide eight to 12 minutes of poise and press-breaking ball control. (And he couldn't be any worse than Sam Cassell.)

4 DATES TO WATCH

11/18 Happy Birthday, David Ortiz! Today, Papi becomes the world's only living "34"-year-old to have been born during the Kennedy Administration.

11/20 The Orlando Magic pay a visit to the Garden. Man, if only KG still had psychotic amounts of pent-up intensity from last year's playoff series...

11/22 Jets at Patriots: "Hey Jets fans, Rex Ryan here! Listen, we got a huge game in New England on Sunday, and I need to ask y'all a favor.... Pray for us, damn it! We are so royally fed..."

11/30 The Pats head to New Orleans to take on the likely undefeated Saints, but this game's about a lot more than handing N.O. its first loss—it's about keeping Mercury Morris off TV.

2 MAJOR LEAGUERS COME TO LIFE

Hmm, So Let's See Here An aging, team-first catcher loses his job to a former Indians farmhand with a great personality and an erratic throwing arm, but decides to swallows his pride and stick it out for one last go-round? Where I have heard that before? Oh yeah. Jason Varitek, meet Jake Taylor.

Hey Timmy, What's That Shit on Your Chest? "Crisco... Bardol... Vagisil. Any one of them will give you extra drop on your knuckleball. Of course, if the umps are watching real close I'll rub a lil' jalapeño up my nose, get it runnin', and if I need to load up I just... wipe my nose." "You put snot on the ball?!" "I haven't got an arm like you, kid. I have to put anything on it I can find. Someday you will, too."

Soroff On JOSHUA BELL

The acclaimed violinist sounds off on G-strings, Symphony Hall and his favorite Stradivarius.

CLASSICAL MUSIC SUPERSTAR JOSHUA BELL, 41, was born and raised in Bloomington, Ind. He appeared as a soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra at age 14 and debuted at Carnegie Hall at 17. Since then, he has performed with most of the world's major orchestras, and his recordings for Sony earned him a Grammy award. He has also recorded numerous film soundtracks, played himself opposite Meryl Streep in Music of the Heart and appeared on every major TV talk show. Another claim to fame: He was one of the first classical musicians to have a music video air on VH1. Bell plays a 1713 Gibson ex Huberman Stradivarius and lives in New York when he's not touring. He performs at Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Nov. 24, 27, 28 and Dec. 1.

Jonathan Soroff: How do you feel about the word prodigy?

Joshua Bell: Well, when it was applied to me, I found it sort of patronizing, like it implied a sort of circus act. I was glad to graduate from that.

Last time you hit a false note?
[Laughs.] Every time you play, you hit a false note. I played at the White House last night, and beforehand I did a performance for the kids. Michelle Obama was sitting right in front of me, and I took a wrong turn in the piece, [skipping] the last 20 bars of the duet I was doing with the guitarist. I made a joke out of it. There's more to music and more to life than playing perfectly.

One thing you would hawk your violin for?
Another violin. That's what happened to me now. I had a Strad, and I fell in love with a new one… well, not new. It's 300 years old. Perhaps if I was dying, I'd hawk it.

Is the Gibson Stradivarius the best in the world?
That's like asking, "Is your wife the finest woman in the world?" Of course the answer's gotta be yes. There may be a time that I crave something different, that gives me a new perspective on sound. But for me, right now, I'm very happy.

The composer—living or dead—with whom you'd most like to have dinner?
Bach, because we don't know enough about him, and he's so fascinating. Schumann would be fascinating. As for the most fun, it might be cliché, but I suppose Mozart, because there's so much humor in his music.

If you weren't a violinist, what would you play?
I can imagine myself playing tennis or golf. Although tennis I was very good at, whereas golf I never was. But I see myself personality-wise as a golfer, because the challenge is the one-on-one of you against the golf course.

Is there an instrument you wish you could play?
I wish my parents had made me take piano lessons. I wish I could sit down at a piano and compose and play proficiently.

Do you make funny faces while performing?
I do, on occasion. My biggest weakness is probably moving around too much. I've seen still photos of myself that are not very flattering. Once you get inside the music, you're not always sure what the rest of your body is doing.

OK, fill in the blank: Violinists do it _____.
Violinists do it with more than just a G-string. [Laughs.]

How much do you usually make?
Enough to have bought myself a Stradivarius.

Who's your fan base?
My crazy stalkers tend to be middle-aged women. [Laughs.]

Is performing a workout?
I perspire a lot, and after a two–hour concert or a solo recital, I'm sure I've lost a few pounds at least. Which is a good thing, because eating is probably my biggest passion outside of music.

Do you exercise?
I enjoy sports; I don't enjoy treadmills. It's the same with music. I enjoy playing music that I love, but I don't enjoy playing scales.

Favorite concert hall or city to play in?
Carnegie Hall, because New York is where I live most of the time, and Carnegie Hall is where I made my debut at 17, so that's kind of a special sort of cathedral for me to enter. But there are others. As a venue, I think Symphony Hall in Boston is one of the greats in the world, and I always love playing there. And maybe Vienna. The Musikverein is just amazing.

Any embarrassing musical likes?
Nothing embarrassing. I like salsa music, Latin music. I love the rock group Genesis. I would call the fact that I download Desperate Housewives embarrassing.

Do you have a preference between playing chamber music or playing with an orchestra?
They are completely different. Just playing chamber music, I probably wouldn't have been able to afford the violin I have if that's all I did. But when all is said and done, there's nothing like chamber music. It's my favorite musical experience usually. The amount of care. The way you can rehearse that you can't with a large orchestra. But that said, playing with a big orchestra in a big setting, like the BSO at Symphony Hall, is an experience that can't be duplicated. It's incredible.

Anyone you'd never perform with again?
There are conductors I'd never work with again, and generally the way it works is that those people on my list, I'm usually on theirs, too.

Top musician in heavy rotation on your iPod?
In terms of violin, I listen to a lot of Jascha Heifetz to re-inspire me.

I understand you once went paragliding in Sun Valley just before a performance.
It was probably not a good idea. The adrenaline rush. I've had my best success at concerts when I've kept my adrenaline level rather low and have a boring day and save it all for the evening. The very first time I did the Tonight Show with Johnny Carson, when I was 21, I did it just before my opening night with the L.A. Philharmonic, and from the stress and adrenaline I could barely stand up.

Your favorite of your recordings?
At Home With Friends! In stores now! [Laughs.] But seriously, maybe my very first album, Presenting Joshua Bell, which I did when I was just 18. It's kind of nostalgic. ✖✖✖

Butter up your friends and family with these cookie recipes.

By Kristen Duncan | Photographs by Dan Watkins

Dough It Yourself

Even in their etymology, cookies are an extension of something bigger than themselves. From the Dutch word for little cakes, "koekje," cookies started as test batter to gauge an oven's temperature, but evolved into pats of butter and dough that represent their baker's ingenuity, pastry skills and, during the holidays, affection for the lucky recipient. Opening a box of them is nothing like unwrapping a sweater. They conjure up an image of the work that went into their execution—someone standing in a warm kitchen with a halo of flour and powdered sugar. And if they're not quite as uniform as Mrs. Fields', all the better. Their imperfections are an invisible thumbprint, a reminder that they're homemade and meant for only a few. Since it's the thought and the taste that matter, we gathered surefire recipes from local bakers. Their cookies make the perfect present in these DIY, less-is-more times.

Appleton Bakery Cafe

Congo Bars

Crust:

1 ¾ cups	graham crackers
4 ½ ounces	melted butter
⅓ cup	sugar

Toppings:

½ cup	walnuts
½ cup	pecans
½ cup	coconut (plus another ½ cup for topping)
½ cup	chocolate (or white-chocolate chips)
3 ½ cups	condensed milk

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

2. Oil an 8x10-inch pan.

3. In a food processor, pulse the graham crackers to make crumbs. Add the crumbs to the butter and sugar. Using your hands, mix together the ingredients, then flatten down the crust, evenly and firmly, to the bottom of the pan. Bake until golden brown, about 10 minutes.

4. Layer walnuts, pecans, coconut and chocolate in that order.

5. Drizzle the condensed milk evenly on top and bake in the oven for 45 minutes until it's golden brown. You can add more coconut about 10 minutes before it's fully cooked, then finish browning.

6. Let cool completely and cut into bars.

Yields [illegible] bars

Clear Flour Bread

Sablés à la Poche

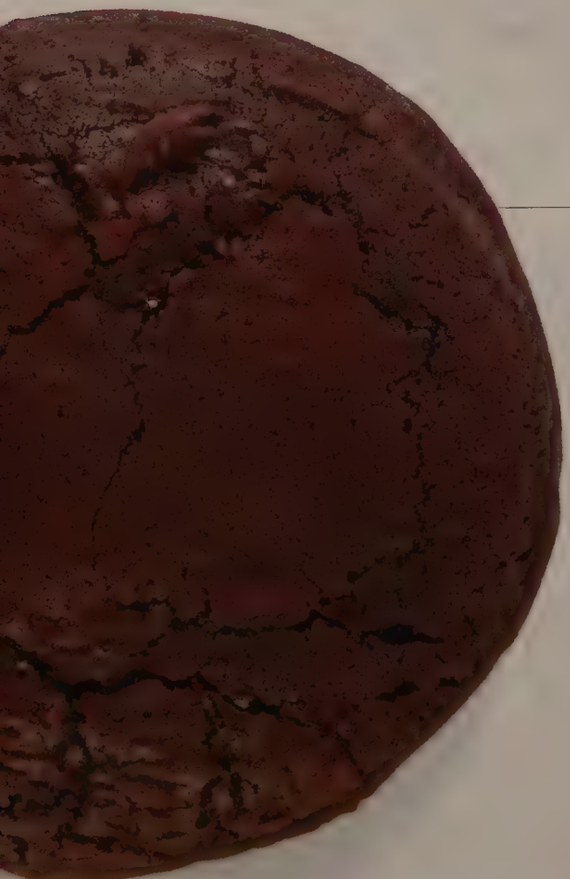
3 ⅓ cups (751.6 grams)	butter, softened
1 ¼ cups (281.8 grams)	powdered sugar
½ cup (112.9 grams)	egg whites at room temperature
2 teaspoons (9.3 grams)	cinnamon
3 ½ cups (845.3 grams)	bread flour
½ tablespoon (7.6 grams)	baking powder
½ tablespoon (7.6 grams)	salt
4 ounces	semi-sweet chocolate
6–8 ounces	chopped raw pistachios

1. Sift together dry ingredients, and set aside.

2. Using a stand mixer and paddle attachment, cream the butter and then add the sugar.

3. Slowly add the egg whites and mix until incorporated.

4. Add sifted dry ingredients, but don't overmix.



5. Fill a pastry bag, fitted with a large star tip, ¾ full with the dough. Pipe into shell shapes onto parchment. At this point, the cookies can be refrigerated and baked later.

6. Preheat oven to 325 degrees and bake for 15 minutes or until the edges are lightly golden. The cookies can also be frozen for up to one week.

7. Melt semi-sweet chocolate and dip the bottom of the cooled cookie in it, then quickly dip in pistachios.

Owner Chasity Limon suggests using weight measurements for the best results.

Yields 4 dozen

Finale

Double-Chocolate Cookies

6	large eggs
2 ½ cups	granulated sugar
1 tablespoon	vanilla extract
6 ounces	bittersweet chocolate
17 ounces	semi-sweet chocolate
1 cup	unsalted butter
1 cup	all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon	baking powder
¾ teaspoon	salt

1. Melt chocolates and butter together in a double boiler until blended.

2. In a separate bowl, whip eggs, sugar and vanilla extract until thick and light.

3. In another bowl, sift all the dry ingredients together.

4. Slowly add the chocolate mixture to the egg mixture on low speed. Fold in flour mixture.

5. The cookie batter will be liquid; let sit for three hours at room temperature.

6. Scoop heaping tablespoons onto cookie sheets that have been lightly coated with a nonstick spray, at least 3 inches apart. Bake on double sheets (one sheet inside of another) at 350 degrees for 10–15 minutes or until the center of the cookie achieves cake-like firmness.

Yields [illegible] dozen

Sofra Bakery & Cafe

Molasses Cookies

¾ cup	canola oil
¼ cup	molasses
1 cup	sugar, plus additional sugar for cookies
1	large egg
2 cups	flour
2 teaspoons	baking soda
½ teaspoon	salt
1 teaspoon	ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon	ground nutmeg
½ teaspoon	ground cloves

1. Combine all dry ingredients. Set aside.

2. Combine oil, molasses, sugar and egg in bowl of a stand mixer. Paddle on medium speed until smooth. Be careful not to incorporate too much air. Mix 15–20 seconds (or vigorously by hand).

3. Add dry ingredients and mix until well-combined, about 20 seconds. Chill dough until it reaches room temperature, about 2 hours. If preparing dough in advance, freeze it so the oil doesn't separate.

4. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Using a small scoop, place formed dough into a bowl of granulated sugar to coat.

5. Place on parchment-lined baking sheet ½-inch apart. Bake 12–15 minutes. Cookies will appear underdone.

Yields 4 dozen

Flour Bakery + Cafe

Raspberry Crumb Bars

Shortbread:

24 tablespoons	unsalted butter, softened
½ cup	sugar
3 tablespoons	confectioner's sugar
1 teaspoon	vanilla extract
2	egg yolks
1 ¼ cups	all-purpose flour
1 ½ cups	cake flour
¾ teaspoon	baking powder
¾ teaspoon	salt

Filling:

1 ½ cups	raspberry jam with seeds

Topping:

¼ cup	confectioner's sugar for dusting

1. Using a stand mixer and paddle attachment, cream together butter and sugars on medium speed until light and fluffy, about 5 minutes. Add vanilla extract and egg yolk until thoroughly combined. Scrape the bowl with a spatula to incorporate all of the yolk. Sift together dry ingredients. Slowly blend the flour into the butter mixture on low speed until everything in the bowl is completely blended.

2. Scrape dough onto a sheet of plastic wrap. Divide it into two pieces: ¾- and ¼-chunks. Wrap the larger piece with plastic and press down to form as flat of a disk as possible. Refrigerate it for 20–30 minutes until firm but still pliable. Wrap the remaining ¼ of the dough entirely in plastic and place in the freezer. (Shortbread can be kept in the refrigerator for up to 5 days or in the freezer for up to a month. If frozen, defrost overnight in the refrigerator, then let soften at room temperature for about 20 minutes before using.)

3. Remove dough from the refrigerator and roll it between two large sheets of parchment paper into a 9x13-inch rectangle. It should be about ⅛–¼ inch thick. Carefully peel off the top sheet of parchment (refrigerate for a few minutes if dough sticks to the paper). Trim the edges to form a sharp rectangle. Transfer the dough and bottom parchment onto a baking sheet.

4. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 20 minutes until the shortbread is light brown, the same color as maple wood. Remove from the oven, and while the shortbread layer is still warm, spoon jam evenly on top.

5. Remove the frozen shortbread and use a hand-held grater with large holes to grate it into flakes. Evenly sprinkle the grated shortbread over the jam. Return it to the oven and bake for another 20–30 minutes until the top is lightly browned. Remove from the oven and let cool completely. Sprinkle with confectioner's sugar, trim the edges, and cut into desired number of bars. Squares may be stored for up to 5 days in an airtight container at room temperature.

Yields 9–12 bars

They represent affection for the lucky recipient.

Is This an Immersive Performance I See Before Me?

TOIL AND TROUBLE

EVERYONE HAS HAD that moment—you're watching a show and itching to get a little closer to the stage. In collaboration with the A.R.T., the British Punchdrunk theater company lets you step into the action. Its U.S. debut Sleep No More transforms Brookline's Old Lincoln School into a vast, elaborate set, where audience members can wander freely, choosing which scenes to follow. A combination of Shakespeare's Macbeth and a Hitchcock thriller, the interactive play is a lot more than just sound and fury. See Birnam Wood actually come to Dunsinane through Jan. 3. BORANA GREKU

Lend a Hand

Flop for Crops

On Nov. 19, bluff for a cause at the Living Room's poker night. Drinking and gambling may not be in the holiday spirit—such addictive fun can lead to lies, debt and, shudder to think, no presents. But you can revel in guilt-free Texas Hold 'Em this season as the proceeds benefit the Food Project, an organization that engages kids in local farming. So enjoy the cocktails and appetizers, and try to win some memorabilia or gift certificates. It's naughty and nice.

Holiday Havoc

Through the Window Pane Imagine watching the falling snow on Christmas Eve, only to have your husband interrupt the tranquility to announce . . . he's taken out a contract on your life, and you might want to make a run for it. So begins Craig Lucas' dark holiday comedy, Reckless. When perky housewife Rachel, a modern-day Alice, tries to escape her husband's hitman, she forgoes a rabbit hole in favor of an open window. With the help of a shady social worker, his paraplegic roommate Pootie and a couple psychiatrists, Rachel comes to terms with the fact that the world may not be as wonderful as she thought. Escape your own reality now through Dec. 12 at the Calderwood Pavilion. Borana Greku

Amelia ★ ½ The troubled life and times of America's foremost female aviator is a story overflowing with promise. Instead, director Mira Nair has mustered up the safest, most boring movie imaginable. Hilary Swank makes Amelia Earhart dull, which is no small feat considering how significant she really was. By all accounts, Earheart was a prickly, horny number, carrying on with her husband (Richard Gere, in his sad, Unfaithful, cuckold mode) and Ewan McGregor's dashing Gene Vidal. Swank and Gere are stuck doing false 1930s movie accents that can't help but alienate the audience. Swank sounds like a Katharine Hepburn pull-string doll. Overall, Amelia plays like a Wikipedia listing of Earheart's accomplishments, never summoning a real point of view. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Antichrist ★★ Half genius, half huckster, Danish filmmaker Lars Von Trier too often lets some fascinating heretical notions fall victim to his provocateur posturing. The controversial Antichrist is both Von Trier's least interesting movie and also his most viscerally pulverizing. This time around he's all audacity, all the time, and even if the film's line of philosophical inquiry is downright laughable, the wily bastard is almost gifted enough to pull it off. Almost. Willem Dafoe and Charlotte Gainsbourg star as a married couple reeling from their toddler's accidental death. Retreating to a creaky country cottage, embarrassingly christened Eden, the two fall into a mutually destructive rut of bad therapy, sado-masochistic sex, talking animals and hideous sequences of genital mutilation. Von Trier is riffing on some lame, pretentious angle wherein Dafoe's rational "Man" loses his battle to domesticate Gainsbourg's feral "Womanhood" amid the twisted power of "Nature," yet there are images that will haunt your dreams. It's easy to snicker at and impossible to shake off. (At Kendall Square.)

The Blind Side ★ The inspirational true story of the Baltimore Ravens' Michael Oher becomes one of the year's most inadvertently offensive movies, thanks to Sandra Bullock's rampaging ego and the kind of unconscious racism Hollywood does better than anyone else. Oher, the troubled son of a crack addict, spent much of his childhood homeless before being adopted by a rich, white family who kindly helped him fulfill his potential. But instead of focusing on Oher's moving struggle, The Blind Side spends two hours inviting us to worship the selflessness of his new mom, played by Bullock as an amalgamation of Julia Roberts' least appealing qualities. She fires off sassy one-liners in endless glamour shots, while the rest of the cast nods approvingly and tells us how great she is. Oher, played by Quinton Aaron, is given no thoughts of his own. He just thanks her profusely and does what he's told. This isn't a movie about adopting a son; it's about adopting a pet. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Box ★ ½ Donnie Darko director Richard Kelly takes a perfectly decent Twilight Zone episode and stretches it out for two hours in this infuriatingly obtuse follow-up to his equally incoherent Southland Tales. Based on a short story by Richard Matheson, the plot boils down to a simple question of morality: Would you accept a million dollars if it meant that someone you've never met would die? Unfortunately, Kelly has no concept of simplicity, and his stories tend to take the path of most resistance on their way to unwieldy ends. Somehow NASA, the NSA, Martian radio-wave cameras, lightening and chronic nosebleeds all come into play, as does a chase through the Boston Public Library and several watery portals to other dimensions. James Marsden and Cameron Diaz show off horrific Southern accents playing the struggling married couple who answer the central question incorrectly. Kelly still has a gift for creating an ominous sense of dread, but his movie doesn't make any sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bright Star ★★★ The unlikely, inevitably doomed love affair between poet John Keats and fashionista Fanny Brawne might sound like the fodder of teary romance novels or tedious Masterpiece Theater episodes, but writer/director Jane Campion is after something else entirely. Campion, a doggedly idiosyncratic artist best known for The Piano, remains in awe of harsh landscapes and rumpled costumes. Often filmmakers embalm their period pieces with golden lighting and auspicious production

Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans ★★★½
Starring Nicolas Cage, Eva Mendes, Xzibit, Fairuza Balk, Jennifer Coolidge, Michael Shannon and Val Kilmer. Screenplay by William Finkelstein. Directed by Werner Herzog. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

FILM BUFFS TOOK NOTICE last year when it was announced that washed-up sell-out Nicolas Cage and madman director Werner Herzog had teamed for a reimagining of Abel Ferrara's agonizing magnum opus, Bad Lieutenant. A nasty passion play set in a crumbling New York City, Ferrara's 1992 film stars Harvey Keitel—giving the performance of a lifetime—as a perverted, drug- and gambling-addicted cop investigating the rape of a nun. A hotbed of lapsed Catholic angst, Bad Lieutenant was structured as a sinner's stations of the cross, complete with the last supper in design. Campion goes the other way, wrestling Keats' idealized lyrical interludes into a grimy, matter-of-fact reality. I always say you know a movie is working if you start to feel its weather, and Bright Star made me put my jacket back on. Sadly, Keats is a bit of a drip. Played by I'm Not There's Ben Whishaw, he comes off as a mopey emo-boy. Better are Abbie Cornish's obstinate, impassioned Fanny and Paul Schneider's revelatory supporting turn as Keats' boorish, protective patron. Still, nothing can top this movie's tactile sense of place. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Capitalism: A Love Story ★★ Michael Moore's latest muddled provocation feels like a flabby greatest-hits tour from a band all too aware it's become irrelevant. Moore has basically been making the same movie over and over again since his razor-sharp 1989 debut Roger & Me, and the shtick has worn awfully. Again, we've got the cheeky use of old movie footage, grossly oversimplified explanations of complex events, ironic music cues and a condescending voiceover narration. As always, Moore steps in front of the camera for a few grandstanding stunts that only end up harassing security guards and other working people he claims to champion. Taking aim at the odious financial skullduggery that capsized our economy, Moore trots out a string of disconnected outrages, extracting pathos from the victims and wagging his finger at the higher-ups. By the end, even Moore seems to have given up, admitting that he's tired of doing this and something needs to change. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

An Education ★★ ½ In what's sure to be Roman Polanski's favorite film of the year, dazzling newcomer Carey Mulligan stars as a 16-year-old schoolgirl who falls under the sway of Peter Sarsgaard's suave 30-something hepcat in gloomy, post-war Britain. Adapted by novelist Nick Hornby from Lynn Barber's memoir, the movie takes a tender look back at statutory rape as a rite of passage, and it's a testament to some fine performances that the film only feels icky in retrospect. There's nobody better than Hornby at dissecting all the ways people like to define themselves through their tastes and fascinations, but in nearly every other respect, his screenplay is too fussy and neat for its own good. This is a very polite, middlebrow view of what must've actually been an extremely messy affair. Director Lone Scherfig keeps everything humming pleasantly along, with even the inevitable betrayals and recriminations occurring at a genteel pitch. It's as if all the characters are afraid to raise their voices. The feel-good final reel is almost unforgivable. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince ★★ The previous Harry Potter film, 2007's rousing Order of the Phoenix, was a first for the Potterverse: a stripped down, focused humdinger that finally felt like one of JK Rowling's beloved tomes had been effectively re-imagined in cinematic terms. For once, this Muggle began to understand what all the fuss was about. Alas, it's back to business as usual at Hogwarts with returning screenwriter Steve Kloves (who penned the first four but sat out the most recent picture) again transcribing an aimless a crack house, Gethsemane as a crime scene in a Harlem church and a semi-crucifixion in Times Square. There's even a cameo by Jesus.

Heads spun at the prospect of Herzog tackling such a grungy, spiritual piece, while everyone secretly worried that Cage might mimic Keitel's whimpering, full-frontal nude scene. Ferrara told reporters he hoped they both would "die in hell."

As it turns out, Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans is a remake in name but definitely not in spirit. There are a couple of nods to the original picture, but Herzog and Cage (who also produced) have jettisoned the religious angle and adopted a sicko, comic tone. It's tragedy replayed as farce, and probably the funniest film I've seen all year.

Cage stars as Terence McDonagh, a decorated cop who suffered a spinal injury while rescuing a prisoner from a flooding jail cell during Hurricane Katrina. Since then, he's been trying to manage his chronic back pain with Vicodin. And cocaine. And heroin. And crack. And hookers.

When notorious crime boss Big Fate (Xzibit) executes an entire family in the Lower Ninth Ward, McDonagh catches the case, despite his erratic behavior.

The story, by veteran cop-show writer William Finkelstein, is fairly rote, procedural stuff with a few shock-value embellishments tossed in for good measure. Fortunately,

What it lacks in sincerity it makes up for in audacity.

Herzog and Cage demonstrate no interest in the story that's being told, and instead use Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans as an excuse for all sorts of whacked-out digressions, absurd set-pieces and the kind of loony, go-for-broke performance we haven't seen from Cage in a decade.

Swaggering around with a .44 Magnum stuffed down the front of his pants, Cage barks, brays and bellows his lines as he ingests enough controlled substances to kill Keith Richards. You'd have to go all the way to back to 1988's Vampire's Kiss, when he ate a live cockroach, to find Cage so deliriously out of control. Homages to Herzog's former collaborator Klaus Kinski abound, as Cage bugs out his eyes and adopts the late lunatic's silent-film physicality. After sitting through so many awful, listless Cage performances, his live-wire acting in Bad Lieutenant is like a reunion with a long-lost friend.

McDonagh's detective work is unusual, to say the least. He spends most of his time hanging with his high-priced hooker girlfriend (a surprisingly adept Eva Mendes) and shaking down her clients for cocaine and cash. He also has to duck his bookie (Brad Dourif) as the college football season is getting the best of him in five-figure increments. McDonagh is forever finding new and inventive ways to pilfer the police evidence room, and once in awhile, he even makes some progress on the case.

From his 1972 masterwork Aguirre, the Wrath of God, all the way through last year's astounding Encounters at the End of the World, Herzog's work has always been preoccupied with the vastness of nature and its cruel indifference toward mankind. Port of Call New Orleans takes that approach to giddy extremes of self-parody, like shooting a scene from the point of view of a nearby alligator for no discernible reason.

This is a high-spirited lark—the kind of film in which the dire plot works itself out through dumb luck, and a tense stakeout stops so the hero can hallucinate a pack of iguanas singing "Release Me." By the time Cage interrogates an elderly woman in a wheelchair by cutting off her oxygen and screaming the "C" word, you know you're far, far away from Keitel's Catholic crisis. What this Bad Lieutenant lacks in sincerity, it makes up for in sheer nihilistic audacity. It's like watching the original film projected onto a funhouse mirror. ✖✖✖ grab bag of moments that don't serve much purpose beyond offering fans of the series some pretty pictures to look at. Sumptuously shot by the great cinematographer Bruno Delbonnel, the film is devoted to long scenes of folks delivering grave passages of exposition. All setup and no payoff, Half-Blood Prince never feels like a movie in its own right, just a lot of logistical scaffolding required to set the stage for the final chapter. (In the suburbs.)

The Informant! ★★★ ½ The exclamation point lets you know exactly how seriously director Steven Soderbergh is taking this true story of corporate malfeasance in the lysine industry. Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Invention of Lying ★ ½ Ricky Gervais, the comic mastermind who gave us the original The Office, as well as HBO's lacerating Extras, tones down his act and sucks up to mainstream romantic comedy fans in this waste of an inspired idea. Set in an alternate universe where nobody is capable of telling a fib, Ricky stars as the one man who learns how to lie. It's a cruel world where folks blab every unpleasant thought crossing their minds. At first, it looks like Gervais might have a smart satire showing just how crucial dishonesty is to our social contracts. Then he accidentally invents religion, and all bets are off. Gervais has no interest in exploring these fascinating comic conceits, instead settling for dull chick-flick formulas as he tries to win the heart of Jennifer Garner. So many ideas are ignored as we wait for the hot babe to fall for the homely schlub who wrote the movie. Who does Ricky think he is, Woody Allen? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Julie & Julia ★★★ Here's a breezy little bauble coasting on the formidable charisma of its stars, yet one crafted with an attention to detail heretofore unseen in the oeuvre of dreaded romcom writer/director Nora Ephron. Meryl Streep is predictably glorious as Julia Child. Propped up on lifts and padded out to Child's imposing linebacker frame, Streep nimbly apes that famous warbly voice and bemused laugh as she clomps around the set like a delightful giantess. It's a warm, affectionate portrait full of clumsy, earthy humor. Less effective is Amy Adams as Julie Powell, who battles the depression of post-9/11 New York City by blogging her attempts to cook every recipe in Child's first book. The script proceeds on two tracks, skipping back and forth between Powell's experiment and Child's early years at Le Cordon Bleu. Pleasantly short on plot, the movie merely invites us to watch these characters discover what they do well. (In the suburbs.)

Law Abiding Citizen ★ ½ Stupid even for an exploitative revenge fantasy, this risible hoot stars 300's Gerard Butler as the shattered father of a murdered family. Jamie Foxx's cool, career-

ist DA cuts a plea agreement, not realizing that Butler will emerge a decade later in full badass mode to declare war on the American justice system. He slaughters federal judges, innocent paralegals, unsuspecting cellmates and anybody else who dares interrupt his tedious "eye-for-an-eye" monologues. The filmmakers try to have their cake and eat it, too: prompting us to cheer for Butler whenever he kills a jerk, but asking for pathos if nicer folks are caught in the crossfire. There's no coherent statement, it's just Seven for Dummies, with Butler's plans growing more absurdly complicated and inadvertently hysterical. Foxx eventually takes up arms and bellows, "F his civil rights!" at which point the audience cheered so loudly that something inside of me died. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Men Who Stare at Goats ★★ ½ Half-formed comedic conceits spray like buckshot across director Grant Heslov's disappointingly cartoonish adaptation of Jon Ronson's exposé on the madness of military psych-ops. Ewan McGregor, who narrates every damn moment of the film, plays a depressed reporter following George Clooney's possibly insane ex-soldier into Baghdad during the early days of the Iraq War. On the road, Clooney tells a tale of the New Earth Army, a top-secret unit that attempted to train cadets in the paranormal arts. Believe it or not, most of this stuff is true. Unfortunately, Heslov's direction cheapens the material by going for broad buffoonery and slapstick where precision is required. Jeff Bridges recycles too many Dude-isms as a hippie squad leader, while Kevin Spacey tiresomely twirls his moustache as a cardboard villain. Everybody's mugging for the camera, but Clooney almost saves the film singlehandedly. Deftly deadpanning outrageous monologues, he plays it straight and sad, improbably getting us invested in this silliness. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paranormal Activity ★ Don't believe the hype. This $15,000 cheapie drew some fleeting attention at festivals a couple years ago and now arrives on a tsunami of tweets thanks to a massive, cynical marketing campaign from Paramount Pictures. Purporting to be the found home video footage of a spectacularly uninteresting couple (Katie Featherson and Micah Sloat), the movie chronicles Katie's troubles with a vaguely defined, undead stalker. This is the laziest, most annoying demon in recent film. What passes for scares involve the creature clomping around the attic like an annoying upstairs neighbor, or every once in awhile turning on the lights in an empty room. Nothing here is novel or even remotely believable. Filmmaker Oren Peli doesn't seem to understand that everyone already saw The Blair Witch Project 10 years ago. The closing shot provides one genuinely great jolt, and it turns out that was only recently added by Steven Spielberg. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Serious Man ★★★★ Grappling with mysteries on a deceptively mundane stage, the latest gem from Joel and Ethan Coen is about the silence of God. Set in a Minneapolis suburb circa 1967, the film stars Michael Stuhlbarg as a college physics professor and human doormat whose entire life begins to crumble one day with the kind of one-thing-after-another momentum that the Coens typically apply to their crime pictures. It's The Book of Job according to a couple of wisenheimer skeptics. Larry's search for celestial explanation leads him up the hierarchy of local rabbis in a series of agonizingly funny and fruitless counseling sessions and rambling parables. As usual, the Coens are being dismissed in some circles as snickering, nihilistic yuksters. But such a reading willfully ignores A Serious Man's deliberately open-ended, questioning structure. In the end, do any of us really have any choice but to accept the mystery? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Where the Wild Things Are ★★★ ½ There's an almost unbearable undertow of melancholy in director Spike Jonze's arty adaptation of Maurice Sendak's 1963 picture book. It's an extraordinarily subjective experience, burrowing so deeply into the child's perspective that the movie works as a Rorschach test for viewers. Some are left completely cold, others in tears. Count me in the latter camp. Drawing out Sendak's sparse sentences to feature length, Jonze and his coscreenwriter Dave Eggers sketch the unhappy world of young Max (Max Records) with swiftness and clarity. Max is a lonely, angry child of divorce, who one night retreats into his imagination, where he becomes king of a wild band of beasts. Each of these marvelous, towering Muppets represents an aspect of Max's troubled home life, and their nonsensical games encompass the gamut of childhood anxieties, with petty jealousies and temper tantrums always circling back around to a gnawing fear of abandonment. It's not a perfect film, but I doubt something so raw and deeply felt ever could be. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Whip It ★★★ Exactly the directorial debut you'd expect from Drew Barrymore, Whip It is clumsy, overly sincere and absolutely adorable. The film is a formula sports picture done right, hitting every tried and true genre cliché with a surfeit of warmth, good feeling and oddball humor. Ellen Page, avoiding sarcastic Juno-isms, stars as an awkward teenage misfit who one day happens upon Austin's riot-grrll, roller-derby community and finally finds her voice. The script is one stock development after another, but what makes the movie work is the care and empathy Barrymore lavishes on her characters. Nothing is cut-and-dry, and there are no villains. Page's disapproving mom attains tragic dimensions thanks to Marcia Gay Harden's tempered performance, and even Juliette Lewis' roller-bully gets an uncommon measure of professional respect. SNL's Kirsten Wiig is in particularly fine form as a sad-eyed single mom who sees all the angles Page is missing. It's a familiar song but sung with conviction. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Zombieland ★★★ Placing third behind Shaun of the Dead and last fall's sly, subversive Zombie Strippers, Ruben Fleischer's Zombieland lacks the serious scares or the meaty subtext of its brethren. But it's still an enjoyable road comedy about the importance of human connection, especially in a post-apocalyptic wasteland riddled with flesh-eating monsters. Mumbling geek Jesse Eisenberg and rowdy redneck Woody Harrelson star as unlikely allies making their way through what's left of the U.S. They happen upon a pair of grifter sisters (Superbad's Emma Stone and Little Miss Sunshine herself, Abigail Breslin), and a dysfunctional family is formed. Clocking in at a brisk 83 minutes, the movie knows how to get in and out before wearing out its welcome. Just be careful how much you read in advance, as nearly a quarter of the film is devoted to a surprising detour involving a special guest star that only a bastard would reveal. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

RANGER REVIVAL

John Fogerty takes a joyous turn to the country side of life.

John Fogerty plays the Orpheum Theatre on Nov. 29.

JOHN FOGERTY CALLS HIMSELF "the luckiest man in the whole world." A busy one at that. In the past month alone, he performed with Bruce Springsteen in an all-star concert for the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, played a PBS Live by Request show, and launched a tour behind both a new CD and live DVD.

Of course, his schedule was also full back in 1969 when his band Creedence Clearwater Revival sold more records than the Beatles. Within a two-year span, singer/songwriter Fogerty spawned such classic hits as "Proud Mary," "Fortunate Son," "Bad Moon Rising," "Green River," "Run Through the Jungle," "Born on the Bayou" and "Have You Ever Seen the Rain?" But for much of the 40-odd years in between, Fogerty felt neither lucky nor busy. In the wake of the group's ugly breakup and legal tangles with Fantasy Records over ownership of his songs, Fogerty refused to play any CCR tunes from 1972 to 1997, except for one 1987 concert for veterans.

"Those were dark days, but I don't really think about that anymore," says Fogerty, 64, who made peace with performing his embattled catalog after mulling Robert Johnson's legacy at the bluesman's Mississippi grave. "I'm in a really great place now, and I tell my wife every now and then, 'Twenty years in hell is worth one day of happiness with you.'"

It was his wife, Julie, who proposed the idea for his latest CD, a sequel to The Blue Ridge Rangers, his 1973 solo debut of country covers. "I don't think anybody noticed it, and I also felt it wasn't very good," Fogerty says of the original, where he played every instrument. "I told myself, 'Man, if I ever get to do this again, I'm going to get real guys.'"

So for The Blue Ridge Rangers Rides Again, Fogerty leaned on such aces as Greg Leisz (pedal-steel guitar, dobro), Buddy Miller (guitar), Jason Mowery (fiddle, mandolin) and ex–John Mellencamp backstop Kenny Aronoff (drums). They all dig into a smooth, relaxed groove for tunes that include John Prine's "Paradise," Ray Price's "I'll Be There (If You Ever Want Me)" and John Denver's "Back Home Again," before hitting stride with spry bluegrass-styled jams.

"This was a holiday for everybody because it was a bit outside what we normally do," Fogerty says from his L.A. home. "Everybody had this connection with music that makes them feel good."

He adds, "I'm the happiest that I've certainly ever been, and the music really reflects that. The new Blue Ridge Rangers album is so full of joy, and I think that's even more important than the particular songs."

That said, Fogerty was keen to include Ricky Nelson's sober "Garden Party," noting he relates to the line, "If memories were all I sang, I'd rather drive a truck." He enlisted Don Henley and Timothy B. Schmit of the Eagles for harmonies. And he got Bruce Springsteen to pair off on the Everly Brothers' "When Will I Be Loved."

"He's my kind of guy," Fogerty says of Springsteen, whose E Street Band he joined to sing CCR favorites on the 2004 Vote for Change tour. "What you see is what you get. He's just true blue, and we happen to like each other. It's really fun to be able to make music at select times in our careers and lives."

One of those times came last month at Madison Square Garden, the first night of the 25th anniversary celebration of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame (airing on HBO on Nov. 29, the same night that Fogerty plays Boston's Orpheum Theatre). In a show also featuring Simon & Garfunkel, Stevie Wonder and Billy Joel, Fogerty sat in with the E Street Band for "Fortunate Son," "Proud Mary" and Roy Orbison's "Oh, Pretty Woman."

"I didn't think about it 'til later, but I think Bruce was carrying on the harmonizing idea that we sort of started with 'When Will I Be Loved,'" Fogerty says, admitting he hit bumps rehearsing the Orbison cover. "I was continually working on that right up until showtime. We walked out there and nailed it, I thought, and had a great time."

Fogerty's perfectionism goes back to the CCR albums he produced when nobody did that sort of thing. And while he's retained his yowling voice, he has honed his lead guitar skills in later years, playing three hours a day.

"I'm always trying to get better," says Fogerty, who offers that his next album will return to his patented swamp-rock riffs. "Having a guitar in your hands all the time triggers music, it triggers creativity, and it helps me write songs." ✖✖✖

Noise Shmoise

Thurston for More

Parents have cried, "Turn down that noise!" for generations. But when Beatles-loving baby boomers shouted it about Sonic Youth, they were making frontman Thurston Moore proud. As part of the first wave of America's noise-rock movement (and fueled by mix-tape culture), Sonic Youth has been breaking pop rules and abusing guitars for almost 30 years. They've also smashed expectations. These days, a group can barely hope for 15 minutes of fame, let alone 15 albums; this past June, Sonic Youth released its 16th record, The Eternal. On Nov. 22 and 23, see the legendary band at the Wilbur Theater. Don't forget your earplugs. Adriana Stimola

Low-Hanging Fruit

Blast Off The Balloon Boy incident taught us that balloons make inadequate flotation devices for children—but fruit is still fair game. Artist Robert C. Jackson personifies apples in his new exhibit Seeing Things at the Arden Gallery. His oil-on-linen paintings depict the inanimate objects taking flight and even waging war. Watch Granny Smiths and Cortlands duke it out through November.

Three-Man Weave

Birds of a Feather The rivalry between the East Coast and the West Coast spans decades, covering everything from beats to burgers. But in the '80s, Magic Johnson and Larry Bird held center court in the battle for supremacy. In When the Game Was Ours, a work she co-authored with the players, Jackie MacMullan chronicles their journey from enemies to lifelong friends. From styles to skin color, MacMullan shows how Magic and Bird's differences helped push them to greatness and save the NBA. She appears at Borders Downtown Crossing on Nov. 18. Adriana Stimola

IMPROPER Sightings!

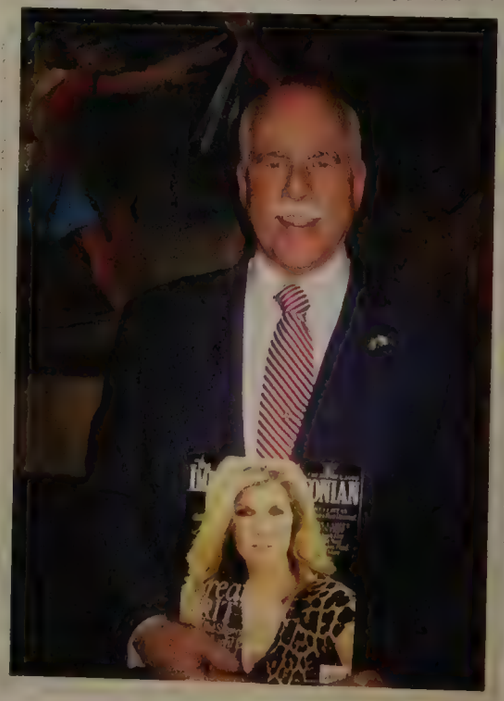
ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER YELLING AT A MALLARD AT THE WORLD DUCK-CALLING CHAMPIONSHIP, HELD NOV. 25–28 IN STUTTGART, KANSAS

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Steven Hill, his wife, Apryl Whitt, and their son Christian shot this picture with the Bob Marley statue in Ocho Rios, Jamaica, but they did not shoot the deputy.

Rebecca Guy-Hamilton, Chelsea Spindel, Kelly Graves and Stina Simmarano hammed it up in Barcelona, Spain. They went whole hog in their days of swine and roses, and reaped what they sowed. Oh, this is getting boaring.

Although Emily Roy was pleased to find a pair of giant clogs in Amsterdam's Keukenhof Gardens, she couldn't help but feel a little disappointed that they weren't a pair of giant Louboutins.

Bristol County sheriff Thomas M. Hodgson likes to read The Improper when he visits his barber. His extremely small barber.

NOODLING AROUND

Hot or Not?

Who cares if the Women's Lunch Place served lasagna at their annual Spaghetti Dinner fundraiser? It was the best damned lasagna I ever tasted.

The evening began with drinks at the Newbury Street shelter, where there was an exhibition of artwork by the women it serves. Then everyone ambled on over to the Taj for the aforementioned lasagna, not to mention hobnobbing with the likes of best-selling author Anita Diamant (the evening's guest speaker), board chair Sarah Monaco and her other half, Peter (whose boss, Jim Pallotta, ponied up a cool quarter of a million bucks for the cause), the raven-haired Ande Zellman, magic carpet salesman Shawn McBride and his laugh-riot other half, Daron Manoogian, first lady Angela Menino accompanied by Hizzonah, Boston Ballet head honcho Mikko Nissinen, petite fashion plate Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney and her BFF Ellie Cornish, and so on and so forth.

The evening's highlight was a speech by one of the guests at the shelter, whose college education, professional background as a journalist and stunning eloquence gave the lie to the idea that only drug addicts and dropouts end up in homeless shelters.

On a lighter note, however, the following exchange was overheard during the cocktail hour, between a single woman and three other guests:

"I know two single guys."

"Are they hot?"

"They're not not hot."

"That means they're not hot."

Honesty's Not Always the Best Policy...

Halloween is considered a high holiday among the gay community, which explains why the costume party held by the Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project at The Estate was one howlin' hootenanny.

Present and accounted for: South End party pair John Keith and Terry Lighte, delightful duo Tom Witkowski and Mark Davila (who deserve props for dressing up as lawn ornaments), a little hottie named Brooks who wore a mime getup but started talking about half an hour into the evening, King of Boston Pride 2009 Rocky Graziano squired by the adorable Tony Vaccarlo, porn stars (or at least they could be) Ben Baum and Shane Cutler, design guru David Webster, the demure Consuela CanSwallow, fashionista Charles Cross (who opted to go nearly naked), the ever-sparkly Bryan Szela, Carmen Miranda lookalike Erik Adolphson, and a man who called himself The Sex Fairy and tapped people with his wand, saying, "There! You'll have good sex tonight!" to which one person indignantly responded, "I don't need you for that."

Sam Mendoza and Betty Riaz at Rogerson Communities' Welcome Home! gala

> His boyfriend responded, "Fat makes you look fat."

Then there was the person who greeted a friend wearing a sequined wife-beater (pardon the expression) by saying, "I can't believe you're wearing exactly the same thing you wore the last time I saw you!" and actually meant it.

However, the evening's funniest (printable) exchange was the man who said, "Does this costume make me look fat?" to which his boyfriend responded, "No. Fat makes you look fat."

Mi Casa Es Su Casa...

It was wishful thinking when Rogerson Communities held its annual Welcome Home! gala at the Mandarin Oriental. ($20 million condo? Yes, please.)

The evening's honoree was Hill Holiday head honcha Karen Kaplan, and on-hand to fete her were such bold-faced names as advertising guru Jack Connors, fashion avatar Betty Riaz, the ubiquitous Mary Kakas, Obama confidante Carol Fulp, Cambridge's answer to Donald Trump Marvin Gilmore, white-hot designer Sam Mendoza (rockin' what looked like a faux coyote vest), pint-sized pistol Barbara Quiroga, and one person who took an enormous gulp of a dirty martini and said, "What?!? It's just like apple juice."

Guests could buy surprise boxes with nifty gifts inside, as well as any of the home decor on loan from Devi in the South End, which prompted someone to say, "Why don't you buy that gong? I think it's only $14,000." To which her friend tastelessly responded, "Who needs a gong? I beat my husband regularly." ✖✖✖

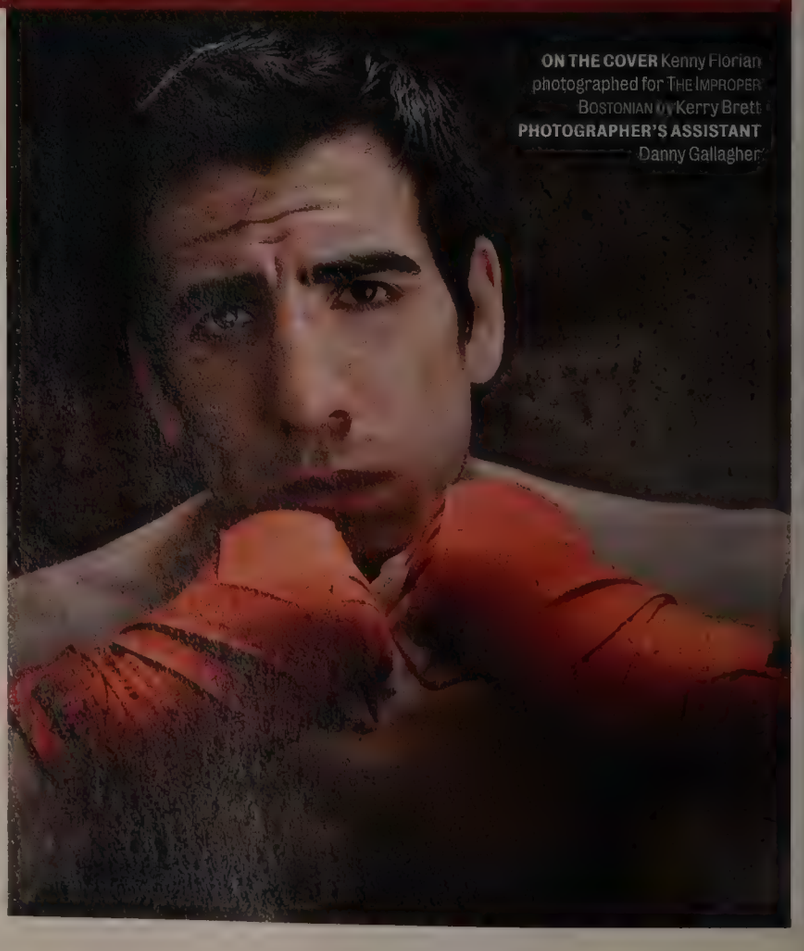
Conditioned Early



My sister and I learned to ski on a molehill called Potato Patch at Wintergreen. Like little flying nuns, we nosedived down the slope in matching snowsuits, our curls billowing behind us. I returned to the mountain in college as a bench-warmer on the alpine team. This being Virginia (cue laughter), there was more ice than powder.

Imagine my excitement, then, to live within driving distance of two top resorts whose conditions seem slightly less character-building. You'll find a guide to Killington and Stowe in this issue with tips on lodging, restaurants and more. Warm-blooded readers can skip straight to Michael Holley's profile of Ultimate Fighter Kenny Florian. As a teen, Florian and his brother practiced moves in the basement, their version of Potato Patch. You gotta start somewhere.

Bitz In RAISING A RINK

MOST KIDS DON'T FIND their métier at the age of five, but that's when Byron Bitz, 25, started skating with a stick. In high school, he even built a hockey rink in his backyard. "My dad got the old boards from a school, and you'd just take a garden hose and turn on the water, and it'd start flooding," says Bitz, the Bruins' right wing. "You got to do it about 20 times, and then you get a nice surface." His backyard being in Saskatoon, the –25 degree Celsius air froze the water instantly, so "you can't keep going continuous." Which left more time for practicing to reach the NHL. "It was always the dream." ANDREW RIMAS

ROCKFORD VIALS
An unusual cognac drink

Bella Luna Restaurant & the Milky Way Lounge

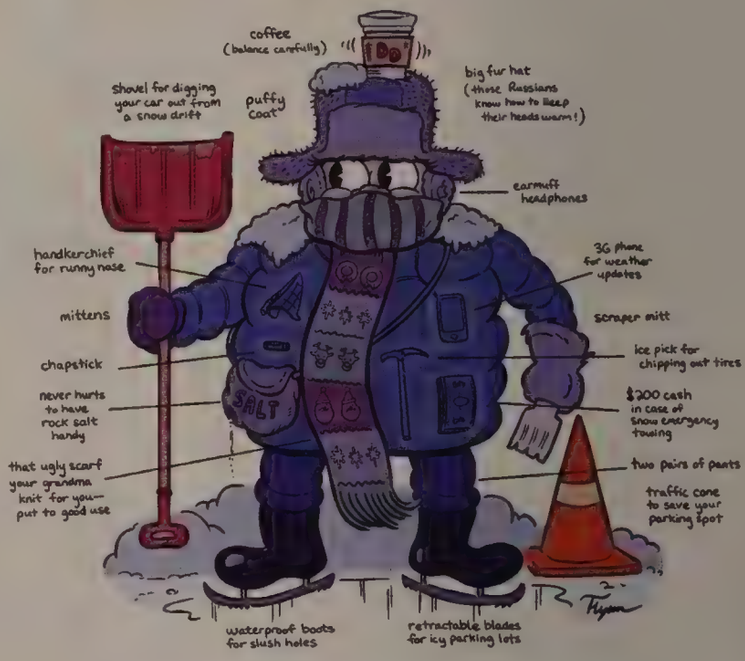
Drink of the Moment

Tough Customer



Thiago Souza has a regular named Rocky, and Rocky likes his Hennessey. So when creating the fall drink menu for Bella Luna and the Milky Way Lounge, Souza decided to dedicate the Hennessey cocktail to him, although he counterintuitively named it the Rockford, thinking it sounded tougher. Also, against his intuition, Rocky doesn't drink it. "He tried it, but he still stuck with his Hennessey straight," Souza admits.

There's a lot unexpected in THE ROCKFORD ($10.50). It's cognac and a touch of Grand Marnier in a snifter, but it's on the rocks… and dusted with nutmeg. With apple cider and a dash of pineapple, the Rockford boasts fruity, fall flavors, but leaves out the ubiquitous pumpkin. Strange for a cognac cocktail, the instinct is to gulp rather than sip. "That's what the orange bitters gives," Souza explains. "It breaks down the harshness of the cognac."

The Rockford would pair well with a Diedre Deluxe ($10–$17), a white pizza with sweetened cranberries, Gorgonzola and caramelized onions, or, surprisingly, with a cognac-phobe. Admits Souza, "I don't like Hennessey straight, but I like this." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Veggie Pie

It's not what you'd expect: a chef who embraces the concept of nose-to-tail cooking talking up the virtues of braised cauliflower on pizza. So it went when I visited Jamie Bissonnette days before Coppa's opening in the South End. Fine-tuning the wood-fired pie, Bissonnette couldn't help kvelling over how nicely the wine-bathed florets paired with béchamel, mozzarella, Parmesan, anchovy, hot-chili flakes and bread crumbs. Though reluctant to pick menu favorites, he admitted this is one of them—not to mention the bone-marrow pizza that's on the way.

Beauty

Brushing Up

The hairbrush is often an afterthought. But if you find it impossible to get that just-from-the-salon look, it's probably the culprit. Donna Hamilton, blow-dry expert and educator at the Loft Salon + Day Spa, breaks down the options.

AMANDA KNORR

1. Detailing Brush: "I used primarily for structural backcombing because of its thin, dual-layered bristle pad and the pointed handle."

2. Round Brush: "Great for any length of hair. It provides a firm hold and even tension on the section being blow-dried."

3. Smoothing: "Great for taking a style down. It easily removes backcombing without breaking or damaging the hair."

4. Paddle Brush: "This brush will make long and wet hair dry in just a few minutes."

5. Style Brush: "The shape allows the hair to be blow-dried smoothly and close to the head. It's also great for teasing in the opposite direction, allowing for maximum volume at the scale."

6. Boar Hair Brush: "Bristles are great for brushing silkening product through overly processed and damaged hair. Works to first detangle and then to smooth the cuticle."

7. Wide Tooth Comb: "I can comb through conditioner in the shower and break up curls—think Taylor Swift."

BRUSHES 1-3: $70, $15.95 and $20.95 at the Loft Salon + Day Spa, 207 Newbury St., Boston (617-536-5648) theloftsalonandday.spa.com

BRUSHES 4-6: $8, $3.69 and $7.99 at CVS, 205 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-263-6658) cvs.com

Going Out

Taking Stock

Opened in late October, Market at the W Boston hotel marked the return of star chef Jean-Georges Vongerichten to Boston 24 years after he made his U.S. debut in our city at the shuttered Lafayette. Actually cooking at Market will be Chris Damskey, a man who'd never been to Boston. He'd never even been to New England. And he'd never eaten haddock. "But I'm coming from Minnesota," he assures. "So I can deal with the snow."

There are five Markets worldwide, each presenting a sort of greatest hits from the Vongerichten catalog. Dishes emblematic of his style display classic French technique modernized with Asian accents, like crab fritters ($14) wrapped in pastry and coupled with a spicy, Hunan-style black-pepper sauce. "But we tried to get things tailored to each place, so it's not stamped," Damskey says. "We went out to lunch here, and Jean-Georges was very impressed with clam pizza." And now there's a locally inspired iteration ($12) accented with chili and parsley.

With only one entrée over $30, Market ducks the haughty price points you might expect with the Vongerichten name. It's also appropriate, as this is a hotel—when Damskey gets caught in the weeds, he's often entangled in chicken fingers and grilled-cheese sandwiches. "The days of fine dining as it was are kind of dead," he explains. "We focus on high-concept food that's approachable from all angles." That accessibility is a lesson Damskey learned from Vongerichten, who said he became a four-star chef by cooking what the guest wanted. "And I like to say that we can cater to just about anyone."

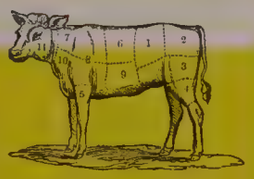
Mopsy {MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY}

ANIMAL PLANET

Recently released in paperback, the history of a flavorful beast.

THE STEER'S HORNS, spanning more than six feet, symbolize the enormity of this book's subject. [Full disclosure: One of the authors is not only an editor here, but the magazine also hosted his launch party.] Cattle have been stars of folklore, spiritual belief, art (Picasso's Minotaur represents "distilled cruelty") and agriculture, landing as sustenance in the kitchen. The writers sweep across history and legend, illustrating beef's tremendous power. Odysseus tells his sailors not to touch cattle: "Or we shall suffer for it; for these cattle... belong to the mighty sun." Identifying with bulls infused man with mythic power as the "symbolic embodiment of the sun." So did slaying them, as even gods did. When Ishtar was spurned by the mortal Gilgamesh, she demanded the use of the Bull of Heaven as a weapon against him. "On its first snort [the bull] opened a pit that swallowed a hundred young men."



Beef: The Untold Story of How Milk, Meat, and Muscle Shaped the World

by Andrew Rimas and Evan D.G. Fraser

Rimas, managing editor at The Improper, lives in Brookline.

A contemporary visit with a Masai tribesman is as exotic as the ancient tales—a family slaughters a steer and then, "Kneeling in the dung, the chief bent his face into the warm, brown liquid." Magic, power, food! Kobe beef, "ivory, blood-jeweled meat," seems shamefully luxurious and expensive in these belt-and-purse–tightening times. Covering long-distance cattle drives, and transformations regarding breeding and feeding of increasingly gigantic "beeves" weighing 800 pounds, the authors move ominously toward the hideous jail-like feedlots of today, with their stingy and unhealthy food eaten by... our future dinner, the cow. The book is packed with stories and interspersed with recipes, culinary interludes like Homeric roast beef. ✖✖✖

"She was an elderly cow, perhaps eight years old, delicate and brown, her cool, pooling eyes fixed on the gnats. Her udder was unobtrusive, not inflated like that of a Holstein, and she wore her stubby horns brushed up, like a giraffe's. She hardly looked like the mother of furies. Across the farm... her sons brooded in the shade like idling tanks."

Nick and Choose { NICK ALTSCHULLER }

LIGHT ME UP

Nick kindles his fears.

WHEN NOT HARD AT WORK, I like to sit back and relax with a tangible reminder of the impending death of my industry.

The Internet has changed the way we consume the written word, but thanks to portability issues and expense, readers still have to pick up actual books, newspapers and magazines (thanks, suckers!). But like the song I illegally downloaded says, "Times, they are a-changing."

We now have products like the Cybook, Foxit eSlick, iRex iLiad and the current king of the hill, the Kindle. Economics is a giant catalyst. Newspaper and book publishing was a 260-billion-dollar business, with half that cash used for things like paper, ink and transport. By moving the medium digitally, the industry can save the equivalent of the GNP of Pakistan. The environmentalist in me loves the reduction in deforestation and fuel consumption. The economist in me wonders why I eat out of cans when I work in a multibillion-dollar industry.

In order to understand my enemy, I went to the Boston Athenaeum, borrowed a Kindle and tried it in a place where thousands of Bostonians may soon use it: rush hour on the T. My first concern was that I'd look like an asshole, but as commuters have a well-honed ability to ignore assholes, no one seemed to notice. The immediate benefit I found is that because the Kindle is so light, and flipping the page only requires a button push, you can easily read with one hand while blocking frottage with the other. Plus, as there's no book cover, you can read the latest Nicholas Sparks novel guilt-free. And as one ear-bud-sharing, emo sing-along reminded me on a trip home, sometimes you need noise in order to concentrate, and the Kindle has plenty of space for MP3s.

There are a lot of cool features on the device—from being able to wirelessly download titles to a hilarious text-to-speech function. You haven't lived until you've heard Stephen Hawking narrate a fight scene. Of course the biggest benefit is the size. I took the Kindle on a flight to South America, and the woman next to me spent hours reading a leather-bound Bible and audibly praising Jesus as we landed, and all I could think was, "Damn, that book looks heavy." On the way back, as I read my compact Kindle with my arms at a polite width, the spindly man next to me spread out the beach towel of his broadsheet as his elbows slid like glaciers across the controls of my TV. I wanted to introduce my Kindle to his colon, especially when my nap was shattered by 180 decibels of football highlights, but it would've cost me about $260.

With a built-in dictionary and the ability to wirelessly Google or Wikipedia words, it'd seem that the Kindle has taken all the effort out of sitting in an armchair, but there are some issues. First, flipping through a text can be incredibly slow and frustrating. The newspaper is bad, but the thought of a digital textbook makes me weep for future generations of college students who'll drink and party... and not read their textbooks. Making notes is a snap, but nowhere near as easy as just writing in the margins. Active reading ends up feeling insular and finite. In the future, I want to pull Robert Parker's Rough Weather down from the shelf and show a friend he actually wrote the sentence, "She looked like she was receiving an Academy Award for stunningess," not have that friend wait while I pull it up from a hard drive.

And, to be honest, the shelf is my hang-up. Yes, I like to pretend I'm a big, smart man with lots of novels on display, but I also like the way books look and feel. Have you buried your nose in a book recently? Those things smell great, too. And the dream is to see your name in print, not liquid crystal. For now, Kindle is convenient, yet the book still carries weight. But unlike glorious, rent-paying city magazines, they may not be around forever. ×××

SPORTS BOOR

TO DAVID F.:
I am so sorry that you suffer from such a grave case of overinflated ego and obscene arrogance. It's very unbecoming. You claim that at Bosse Sports one day, I smiled at you and proceeded to "hit on you." The reality: I had no idea who you were and couldn't identify you if my life depended on it. According to my pilates instructor, the only time you and I ever intersected was when I said, "Excuse me," and gave a polite smile as I moved around what is your considerable girth. At that point, you contacted DJ, and [inquired as to] my identity. My fiancé, of course, laughed about it because he knows that his young, beautiful, Ph.D.-candidate woman wouldn't look twice at you. Yes, I'm younger than you, far more attractive than you, far more intelligent than you, make my own money, and we run in the same circles, Davey boy. In other words, I am so far out of your league we're not even playing in the same ballpark. That you would claim that I would be attracted to you, or flirt with you, is untrue, slanderous, disturbing, revolting and simply laughable. Get a reality check. Not charmed, I'm sure

To the woman who helped my handicapped dad at Target:
Because of multiple strokes, he has almost no movement on one side and very limited movement on the other. He, therefore, can't use a credit card (can't write) and carries limited cash. You were in line, and noticed the cashier start "unscanning" a few items. You graciously volunteered to pay the difference. My dad came home beaming from ear-to-ear. You're a shining example that despite all the bad, there are still wonderful, good-hearted people in this world. God bless you.

Grateful

FOR HIM

For the guy on the go the perfect carry-all reporter bag with lots of pockets and compartments for all his gear.

Reporter Bag

T-7 Track Jacket

Looking for a gift for a guy who loves soccer, but doesn't play? How about a jacket inspired by the sport, but fashionable enough to wear when watching a game. He can show off his soccer history IQ when wearing this jacket this holiday season.

A blast from the past, the Cabana Racer II returns. This classic lightweight flat was first introduced in 1981 and today is refashioned with an explosion of bold colors and is as light as a feather.

Cabana Racer II

FOR HER

For that friend who could use a walk on the wild side, we suggest the Fur Grip Bag. Cheeky without going over-the-top, the bag's pop of color and zebra-print graphic lend just enough spice, and maybe a hint of danger, to her demure wardrobe.

Fur Grip Bag

Track Jacket

Sporty yet stylish, this track jacket could be a perfect gift for the girl looking for a casual jacket for school, work or play. Inspired by PUMA's relationship with Africa, as a sponsor of many of the continent's popular soccer teams, this track jacket is a closet staple.

Leap into the winter wonderland with this sassy boot. The GV Snowbucket is a modern puffy boot that fuses the influences of the iconic GV Special sneaker with your favorite puffy winter coat. This style is certainly both fun and sporty for this winter's snowbunny.

If you're looking for the bright silk saris, they've moved to the basement with the other clothes. There wasn't room for them once the folks behind One World Cuisine brought in booths, rotisseries and tavas, converting the back of their Central Square market into an Indian street-food joint. DOUZO DOUBLES UP

Basho should score in Fenway.

YES, HE SAID Japanese brasserie. It's a challenge to keep listening after that—Japanese what?!?—but the speaker is Jack Huang, owner of Douzo, so he probably knows what he's talking about.

What he's talking about is Basho, a restaurant he plans to open in the spring of 2010. Huang may have to explain his terminology, but he's excited about the concept: a 250-seat eatery (plus 50 on a patio) featuring three cooking areas (a main kitchen, a sushi and raw bar, and a robata grill bar). Basho will be located in Fenway in a Boylston Street building that's "a mix of residential and medical offices," Huang says.

Although he's not ready to reveal the details, "a great executive chef will be on board," Huang declares, preparing "very authentic traditional food and very creative items," mostly served as "smaller plates." Decor will focus on earth tones and "environmentally friendly" design.

ON THE MOVE: After 18 years as a Harvard Square fixture, the Bombay Club has moved into the South End space most recently occupied by Pho Republique. The new Bombay Club will serve lunch and dinner; the bar stays open until 1 am.... The original Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain is expanding into the neighboring space, adding a generously-sized bar to the petite dining room.

CENTRAL TIME: Cantabrigians won't have to commute to the South End or Fort Point for their sticky-bun fix. That's because Flour Bakery + Cafe owner Joanne Chang is scouting spaces in Central and Kendall squares for the third location of her popular pastry place.

Step N°6 : The Beheading

Like any European great, a proper beheading keeps the legend alive. This is because removing large, loose bubbles prevents the Stella Artois from going flat. Such attention is ideal. After all, perfection is in the details.

I HAD NEIL YOUNG'S LYRIC, "Rock 'n' roll will never die," floating through my head as I walked into Trina's Starlite Lounge. Until a year ago, the building housed the Abbey Lounge, a beloved little club where you could find loud, local punk and cheap beer.

Starlite pays tribute to the indie institution by providing a warm, divey destination that fills nightly with both the skinny-jeaned set and their restaurant-industry counterparts. You can still find cheap beer, and now, semi-cheap, satisfying comfort food, as the new owners replaced the stage with a kitchen.

I was meeting Tim Wiechmann of Cambridge's TW Food at the Somerville spot. In another life, Wiechmann was a die-hard rocker, who spent time on the road. He played jazz and blues nationwide with an ex–BB King sideman before packing up his guitar to focus on cooking. After we each ordered a glass of wine (Niederösterreich gruner veltliner for him; Guenoc cabernet sauvignon for me; $8 apiece), he explained: "It's a bug. Music is this thing inside you, like any art. I just happen to have two arts inside me."

Smoked sweet-potato soup (without pancetta)

Honey-mustard–glazed salmon

Cornbread

We paused to peruse the menu, which I hoped Wiechmann would appreciate for being more casual than the stylized, locally sourced cuisine he prepares at two-year-old TW Food. Though he preps some incredible charcuterie, Wiechmann dropped the bomb that he's been a pescatarian for about a year. "I don't eat any industrial foods at all," he said.

It fits into his restaurant's philosophy—sustainable, ingredient-driven—that stems from his days as the original chef at Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain. How, I wondered, would Starlite's French fries fit into his diet? "Hey man, I eat Santarpio's pizza on my days off," Wiechmann admitted, before adding that he's been having less pizza as he gets more serious about his commitment.

So while I (somewhat guiltily) examined the list of griddled hot dogs and multilayered Angus burgers, Wiechmann listed off the fish items, happy to see baked haddock without bacon. "This is a great menu," he declared.

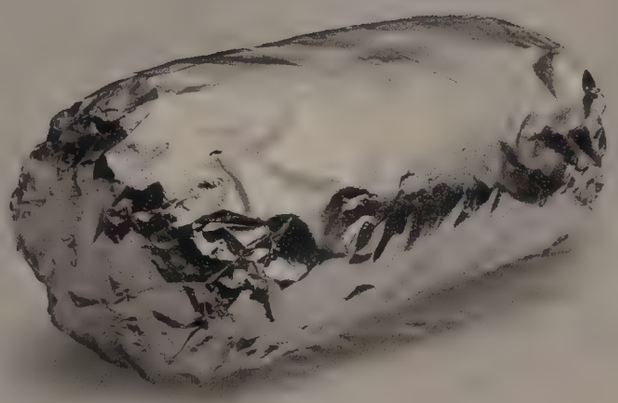
YAM IT ALL Tim Wiechmann and sweet-potato soup

He gravitated toward the crab cake ($9) sitting on a bed of baby arugula and slathered with Old Bay aioli. "Great breading," Wiechmann commented. I went with a cup of sweet-potato soup ($5) sprinkled with bits of salty, sweet pancetta. With hints of maple and smoke, it tasted like fall.

Our server, whom Wiechmann complimented a few times by night's end, sold me on the "dog of the day" ($5) served split, seared and topped with a cheese-and-spinach spread and tomato salsa. The knife-and-fork affair was a rich, salty way to smother the beef hidden inside. Wiechmann tried the honey-mustard–glazed salmon ($17), a huge portion that arrived with a mound of house-made spaetzle and roasted Brussels sprouts. "That is a lot of food, but really good," he said. "I like what they're doing here."

Portion size had been on Wiechmann's mind, owing to his belief in the philosophy that less is always more. Still, he insisted we get dessert. But what about all that talk of industrial foods? What about refined sugars?

"Are you kidding me?" he asked. "I love dessert wine, cordials. I love chocolate. And French pastry is the most unhealthy thing on the planet, but eventually I'll be able to make my desserts with honey."



Unfortunately, our server told us, Starlite doesn't offer his favorite course. Wiechmann's face fell a little at the news. "But you could get the cornbread," she suggested. "It's topped with a really sweet honey butter."

A crumbly, towering hunk, the cornbread ($3) hit the spot. Not too dry, it was covered with a plum-sized pat of honey butter that Wiechmann spread like icing.

"It's sweet," he conceded happily. "And really very good." ✖✖✖

CATTLE CAN'T JUMP. BUT THAT DIDN'T STOP US FROM RAISING THE BAR.

Gourmet burrito. It's not often you see those two words hanging out together. But if it's up to us, they're going to be hanging out a whole lot more. That's because we believe that every burrito is born with the right to better ingredients. And when we say better, we mean better in every sense of the word: better tasting, coming from better sources, better for the environment, better for the animals and better for the farmers who raise the animals. Take our beef, for instance. More than 60% of it is naturally raised, and every day we're striving to make that number even higher. That means no growth hormones or antibiotics, and a strictly vegetarian diet. It's more expensive raising cattle this way. But we think it's worth it. And when you bite into a mouth-watering steak or barbacoa burrito, we're pretty sure you'll agree. That's why we are working overtime to make all of our beef, in all of our restaurants, naturally raised. Changing the way America sources, serves and eats beef isn't going to be easy. But you're helping us make that happen every time you come in.

A GOOD NOTE

The Back Bay Association's annual "The Best of Back Bay" benefit took place on Nov. 10 at the Four Seasons Hotel. Following a cocktail party, more than 350 guests took trolleys to dinner at 25 Back Bay restaurants. The event raised $120,000 for the association's programs supporting the neighborhood's business community.

Boston Lyric Opera celebrated its 100th anniversary at "The Century Gala," a fundraiser on Nov. 14, also at the Four Seasons Hotel. The event commemorated the 1909 opening of Boston's original Opera House on Huntington Ave., which was demolished in 1958. Singers from upcoming productions and Carmen conductor Keith Lockhart mingled with 200 guests and raised more than $250,000 for the Boston Lyric Opera.

YEE HAW

I say, I say, New England needs its own country music scene.

LAST MONTH I WENT TO A wedding in Richmond, Va., and drove down Monument Avenue, which features a series of giant statues depicting southern Civil War heroes. Growing up in New England, you take it as sort of a given that the Confederacy was the bad guy in the war. You know, the pro-slavery, agrarian secessionists bent on destroying America—as those biased northern textbook manufacturers would have it.

Granted, guys like Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee are historic figures, but they lost, and Monument Avenue was startling because America doesn't celebrate losers. At the surrender at Appomattox, Grant should've demanded that Lee sign a form declaring: "There shall be no statues of any of us losers, and even though it's mildly impressive that we managed to build a submarine in the 1800s, the only future monument to my life shall be a totally awesome orange Dodge Charger that can jump over barns. —Robert E. Lee."

Which brings me, naturally, to country music. I've embarked on a few road trips lately to the hinterlands, where it's about the only thing on the FM dial. And, after listening to a fair helping,

Tip yer hat to the northern redneck.

Country music is very much of a place, and that place is the American South.

I've come to the conclusion that New Englanders need their own tunes. Despite Lee's best efforts, this is still one big country, and therefore the life experiences and priorities of the northern redneck aren't necessarily reflected in music produced by the southern hillbilly.

For example, I was driving through Canada when I heard the song "People Are Crazy," which tells the story of a male-bonding session that takes place in a bar in Ohio. I mean, can Canadians even relate to a story set in an exotic, sunny paradise like Ohio? And if they can, imagine how much more they'd enjoy a song with cultural references they could understand, like workin' on the Alberta oil sands, eatin' at Tim Horton's, drinkin' Molson and watchin' hockey. I think I just wrote the next Canadian country hit. Somebody get me a twangy guitar and a lumberjack shirt.

In other major music genres, offshoots of the form tend to spread across the nation. Hip-hop has the East Coast, the West Coast and whatever planet Lil' Wayne came from. Rock is international. But country music is very much of a place, and that place is the American South. Consider these lyrics from Josh Thompson's "Beer on the Table": "Once the bills are paid and that bass boat tank has gone from E to F, I fill that big ol' cooler up there ain't a whole lot left." If you showed up at the Pemaquid lobster-boat races in a bass boat, you'd be laughed straight out to Monhegan Island.

Easton Corbin's "I'm a Little More Country Than That" asks listeners to: "Imagine a dirt road full of pot holes, with a creek bank and some cane poles, catching channel cat. I'm a little more country than that." After the part about potholes I'm completely lost, but I infer that Southerners somehow use canes to catch cats. Mr. Corbin, if his boasts are valid, is even a little more country than that.

Certain themes are universal—the desire for a loyal soulmate, a nice truck, a dog who don't chew up yer guns. But other concerns of the northern rural-dweller are sadly unrepresented. Where are the country songs about snowstorms, gay marriage and coffee brandy? What about lobstering, moose hunting and riding snowmobiles? Has Toby Keith ever made his own maple syrup? No, because if he had, there'd be a song called "I Made My Own Maple Syrup, and I Ain't Sharin' It With No Illegal Immigrants."

Here's a tune I just made up for my country aficionados in New England. I call it "Your Driveway Ain't All I Want to Plow": "I love diggin' clams and eatin' mussels from Maine. I love the smell of a moose in the rain. But I'd trade my Ski-Doo for your lovin' right now, 'cause your driveway ain't all I want to plow."

Southerners have warm weather, all the manufacturing jobs and college football teams that are actually good. It's not fair that they also have a monopoly on hokey song lyrics about fishing. Plus, it's past time that the North had another win. So get ready, South. In the words of Abraham Lincoln: Take your tongue outta my mouth, 'cause I'm kissing you goodbye. ✖✖✖

TROUBLE BRUIN

The B's need to improve their game.

LAST WINTER I found myself watching the Boston Bruins out of love rather than out of necessity. It was fun. Around the season's midway point, I teed it up with the great Cam Neely, who shared my enthusiasm. It was easy to see why he was full of black 'n' gold pride. Neely couldn't say enough about the team's effort, which resembled the Bruins he played for. He also credited coach Claude Julien, who was general manager Peter Chiarelli's semi-controversial pick.

The team was young, fast and, most important, tough. And they had a nice mix of veterans with Marc Savard, Zdeno Chara, PJ Axelsson and Mark Recchi (a late addition). They were a good group, no doubt about it.

To say that Bruins fans were disappointed in the seventh-game loss to Carolina would be an understatement. The B's appeared to have everything in place to make a run at the Pittsburgh Penguins in the conference finals. We essentially gave the team a mulligan. I don't know if it was deserved, based on the disappointing decade or so before, but they entered the 2009-10 season with a lot of hope. They appeared ready to take the next step among the elite.

But then Phil Kessel changed things a bit. The B's top goal scorer wasn't as enamored with the idea of being part of Boston's future as the rest of us. Rumor has it that Kessel and Julien didn't get along, probably dating back to the coach's public flogging of Kessel during the epic Bruins-Habs opening-round playoff series the year before. Kessel was benched for three games. Apparently, he wasn't up to snuff on his defense.

Chris Collins is a sportscaster for New England Cable News. Contact him at chris@improper.com.

It's quickly become clear that replacing Phil Kessel might not be so easy.

Is that important? When Kessel knocks in 30 goals with a so-so attitude, I think it's safe to say that if Julien could've gotten him to commit to "being a Bruin," the guy might've been a 50-goal scorer. We'll never know, of course. Kessel's tenure with the B's ended in its infancy—he was traded to Toronto at age 21.

It's quickly become clear that replacing him might not be so easy. Scoring is a unique skill. From the lips of Bill Parcells, "You are who you are," and if it's 20 goals a season, that's probably all you're going to get from certain people. This proved painfully true in mid-November when the Bruins played the Penguins (a rematch of their game four days earlier). At first, it was just like last year. Goals. Comebacks. Great saves.

But after the B's last comeback goal, putting them ahead 5-4 in the final two minutes, all hell broke loose. The Penguins scored a semi-lucky goal, thanks to a broken stick on the Bruins' defense, with less than one second remaining in the game. Yes, less than one damn second! The Penguins then scored in overtime when Tim Thomas misplayed a puck behind the net. I felt sick to my stomach.

Sure, the Bruins have had a tough time with injuries, but that's no excuse. Neither is the Kessel trade. The Bruins didn't have to trade him. Just like the Celtics didn't have to trade their malcontent youngster, Rajon Rondo. To the contrary, the Celtics had several meetings with Rondo to let him know it was their way or the highway. He chose their way.

I have issues with the Bruins this season, even if it's early. David Krejci and Michael Ryder—two guys who were supposed to pick up some of Kessel's slack—have come out of the gate too slow. The Bruins aren't going to be real contenders if they can't score. It's pretty simple. Come playoff time, it's your stars that carry the day, and, right now, there isn't anybody playing like a star.

Hopefully Lucic and Savard will add a boost. I expect they will. I'm just not sure if it's going to be enough. I'm not afraid to admit this: I miss Phil Kessel. I just hope the Bruins, who have more insight on the matter than I do, have reason to know better. ✖✖✖

Soroff On JARED BOWEN

WGBH-TV reporter Jared Bowen on comparisons to Tom Hanks, audience etiquette and guilty TV

LOCAL TELEVISION PERSONALITY JARED BOWEN of WGBH-TV's Greater Boston was born in Newton and raised in Upton. Bowen, 33, graduated with a degree in broadcast journalism from Emerson College, where he won several Associated Press awards for his reporting. He then received a fellowship from the International Radio and Television Society, which placed him at Dateline NBC in New York. Bowen joined the staff of Greater Boston, hosted by Emily Rooney, in 1999 as a field producer, rising through the ranks to on-air contributor and, in 2005, reporter. Bowen covers everything from politics to breaking news to culture and the arts in his "Center Stage" reports. He's the recipient of two Emmy awards and lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: So when are you going to stop stealing my story ideas?

Jared Bowen: [Laughs.] I've never stolen a story idea from you.

Story you're most proud of?
I did it a few years ago. It was about this guy who'd been abused at the Fernald School.... After it aired, a woman contacted me. She was a retired English teacher. She offered to tutor him, so it was a story that had some impact and hopefully changed this guy's life for the better.

Worst faux pas as a reporter?
I got food poisoning at the Republican National Convention in New York.... [Later] Anderson Cooper comes over and does his stand-up right next to me, and I just bend over and vomit in the sewer grate, right in front of him. Not my finest hour.

Under the tough exterior, is Emily Rooney really a softie?
She is a softie. She's going to kill me for saying this, but she's still devastated over Patrick Swayze's death because she's obsessed with the movie Dirty Dancing.

Still, nobody puts Emily Rooney in the corner. Why isn't there more locally produced TV?
Because nobody has any money. The industry's changed so much that even the commercial stations rely on things they're fed from other stations. Nobody can afford to produce news anymore. It's expensive.

Anyone ever say you look like a tin soldier?
No. I get Tom Hanks a lot... I'm not sure how much of a compliment that is. I interviewed him once, and even he acknowledged it.

Do you always get carded at bars and liquor stores?
I frequently get carded, and I love it. Because frequently the people I'm with don't.

Favorite thing about the arts scene in Boston?
Change. Just in the past year, we got Diane Paulus at the American Repertory Theater, Kate Warner at the New Rep, Peter DuBois at the Huntington, Veronique LeMelle at the Boston Center for the Arts, and while I'm sad that Nicholas Baume left the ICA, I'm sure they'll replace him with someone equally amazing. A lot of them know each other, and there's all this youth and vibrancy, and the whole experience of the theater, especially, is changing.

Biggest problem with the arts scene in Boston?
Getting the message out. They're so limited in how they can spread the word. Which is part of what I like about my job. I get to help with that at least a bit.

Pet peeve at a show?
Eating. Drives me insane. It never fails. I'll go to a movie and pick my seat, and I think I'm free and clear because the movie's already started. And then someone with a large trough of popcorn sits right behind me and takes two hours to eat it. And all I can hear is the crunching.

Weirdest fan encounter?
I was at the Huntington, and the woman sitting next to me said, "I know who you are, and when you first started, I didn't like you." I was just baffled, thinking, "Well, do you like me now? Why did you feel compelled to tell me that?"

Where do you keep your Emmy awards?
They're on a bookshelf in my study.

Guilty TV pleasure?
The Real Housewives of New Jersey. I loved it. Sorry.

Is WGBH the best public TV station in the country?
Hands down. No question about it.

What's your best feature?
My charming personality?

Not the dimples?
I was traumatized when the kids on the bus in the first grade called me Dimples.

Dream job?
My own show on a network.

Beauty secrets? Have you had your teeth whitened? Botox? Restylane?
I just recently whitened my teeth, which was the most painful process I think I've encountered. Otherwise, I drink lots of water and get as much sleep as possible.

Do you secretly enjoy wearing makeup?
I do, because I look a helluva lot better afterward.

The 10 pounds the camera adds...
It's all in my face. Chin up.

Still, are you the prettiest face on Greater Boston?
It's too loud in here. I can't hear the question. [Laughs.]

Do you watch yourself?
Every night, because I need to see how I can be better.

Do you consider yourself a critic?
I do, and I don't. I have to be critical for our audience, because there are limited dollars for things like theater tickets, and I know people look to me to guide them. But at the same time, I want to support the arts and introduce everything that's out there, so I also try to give context, to allow people to make their own decisions.

OK, criticize yourself.
Needs to be tougher in interviews. But my strength is that I genuinely love what I do, so I hope that comes across. ×××

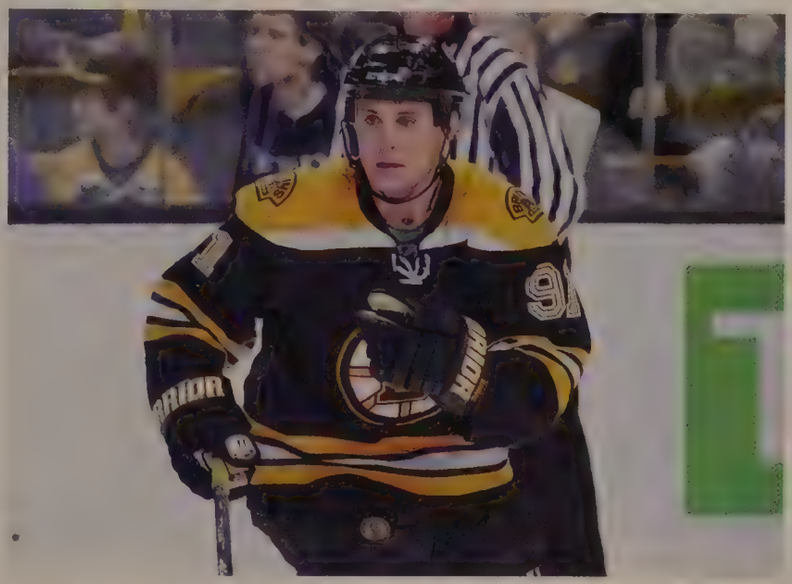
ON WELKER, WILFORK, SAVARD AND KG

3 Celtics Extras

Pay It Forward I think I've finally figured out how Antoine Walker can pull himself out of debt. He should sue Rasheed Wallace for identity theft! OK, OK, maybe Sheed hasn't reached the bad-three-chucking, no-defense depths of Antoine yet, but if he starts making weekend trips to Mohegan, I'm seriously gonna freak out.

Baby Back It won't be easy for Big Baby to climb his way out of Celtic Nation's doghouse, but he'll have an opportunity to make some serious progress over this next month. The C's are a team in need of a major jolt—of energy, attitude, charisma—and BBD's a guy who offers all of that. (Fighting the urge… ah, what the hell.) His return to the rotation could really pack a punch.



I've Been Sitting on This One Awhile But I can't take it anymore. Aztec Gino must be stopped! I want his headdress on a platter! Although something tells me it would take a lot more than a beat down to get that guy to stop dancing.

2 EARLY PATRIOT MVPS

No Running! Vince Wilfork isn't a player who's worth can be measured by statistics alone—after all, the guy only has 7.5 career sacks. But every so often, a stat comes along that perfectly embodies every ounce (5,200 of them, if you're counting) of what Wilfork means to this team. Did you know the Pats have only given up three rushing TDs over their first 10 games? That's all Vince Wilfork, Defensive MVP.

The Slot Machine Randy Moss and Tom Brady are both first-ballot Hall of Famers playing in the (somewhat) prime of their careers, but neither is better than when Wes Welker's on the field. Sure, No. 83 might not be the engine that makes the offense go, but the engine doesn't work without a spark plug.

5 HOT HEADLINES

In Search of G OK, so how can I best sum up Kevin Garnett's knee issues in one short paragraph? By wasting words on an unnecessary intro? Nah, by saying this: KG isn't even remotely ready to compete at the NBA's highest level, and as long as that's the case, neither are the Celtics. There's not any number of game-winning jumpers that can hide that fact.

Savard for Seven Maybe it took the "Great Scoring Drought of 2009" to really get the wheels rolling, but the Bruins are finally ready to invest in some offensive firepower. Yeah, it seems a little crazy to give a seven-year deal to 32-year-old Marc Savard, but it sure beats watching him throw on another jersey and kicking our asses every year (see 12/5).

Halladay, Celebrate! Just as we were going to press, news broke that the Sox were in hot pursuit of Roy Halladay. They'd have to give up Clay Buchholz and Casey Kelly, to which I say… good riddance! A Beckett/Halladay/Lester/Dice-K rotation is Boston's only chance to keep pace with the Yankees. Especially considering the prospect of Jeremy Hermida, starting left fielder.

Hale, Yes You know it's early in the offseason when we're writing about a third-base coach, but, hey, what are you gonna do? Anyway, I'd like to personally thank DeMarlo Hale for his four years of stellar service. After being force-fed turds like Wendall Kim and Dale Sveum, who knew you could be a 3B coach and still have a pulse?

Fourth and Two I know, I know. You're over it already. Honestly, I am, too. But this is my first chance to respond, so here we go… I thought Belichick's decision was awful. I thought it was arrogant, shortsighted and careless. And I loved every second of it.

1 ONE INJURY UPDATE

Oh, wow! JD Drew had surgery last month?!?! That's crazy!! But at this point, shouldn't it only qualify as news when he doesn't have offseason surgery? Either way, add "left shoulder" to the list of ailments that will be bothering Drew by April.

4 DATES TO WATCH

12/5 Phil Kessel returns to the Garden as a member of the Toronto Maple Leafs. Doesn't this feel a little like the first time Adam Banks played against his old team in the Mighty Ducks, or do I just think that after every hockey trade?

12/6 The Pats head to Miami for Round 2 with the Dolphins. As an added treat, Joey Porter will attempt to set a Guinness World Record by talking shit with 10 feet stuck in his mouth.

12/7–12/10 Will Mike Lowell be traded? Is Adrian Gonzalez coming to Boston? What happens when Omar Minaya encounters a naked Brian Cashman in the hotel sauna? We'll find out, as the MLB Winter Meetings kick off in Indianapolis.

12/8 The Celtics host rookie phenom Brandon Jennings and the Bucks. These tickets make the perfect gag gift for that special Knicks fan in your life.

AN INSIDER'S GUIDE TO KILLINGTON AND STOWE

snow REPORT

LET VANCOUVER HAVE THE OLYMPICS.

Good riddance to the crowds, the TV crews, the bobsled teams with their feel-good stories. And the Alps can keep their expensive Euro-exchange rates. Why spend a year's rent on Kitzbühel when you've got two world-class resorts just up the road in Vermont? Stowe, known for its picturesque, 200-year-old village, has 116 trails on the state's highest peak. A hop and a ski jump to the south is Killington, which makes up for its lack of town center (development is in the works) with 141 slopes fanning across six mountains. At just under three-and-a-half hours, both spots are easy road trips on winter weekends. To help maximize your time there, we've compiled this insider's guide, covering all the basics from where to carb-load on lemon muffins to where to catch secret air with the locals (snowboarders welcome). You won't waste a calorie or a run.

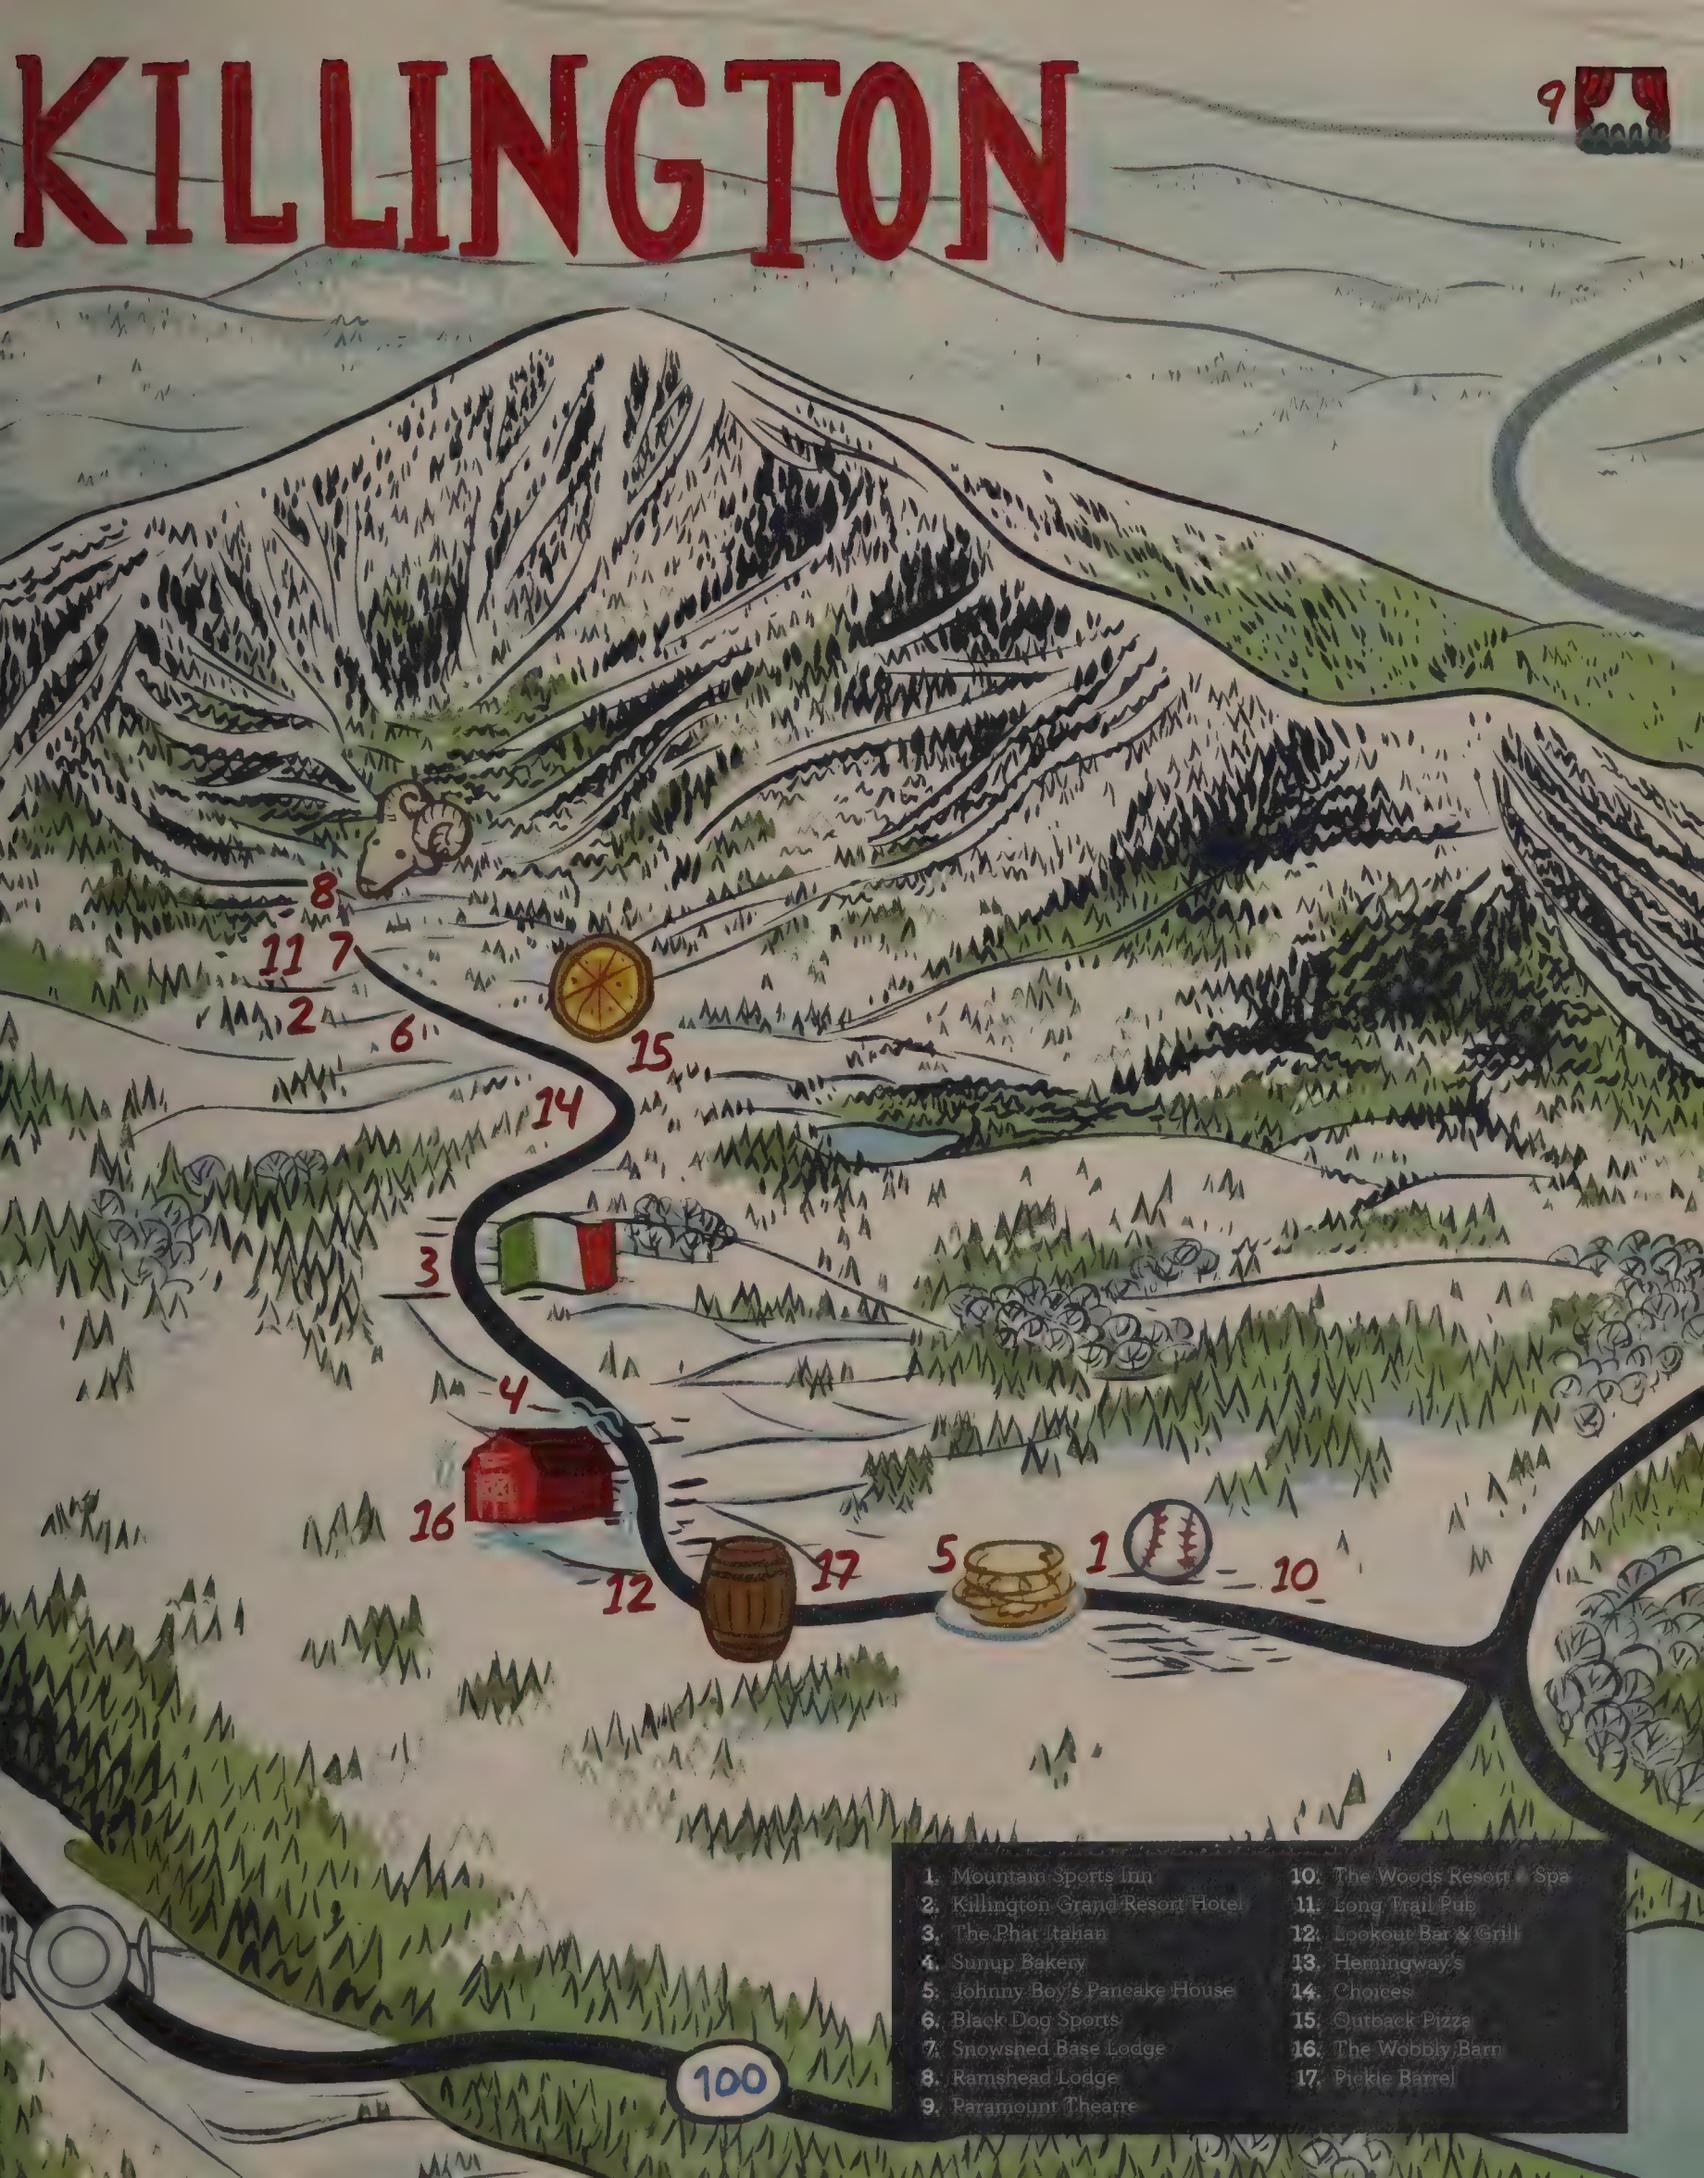
KILLINGTON

ROAD TRIP! Directions from Boston: Take I-93 north to I-89 north. Take Exit 1 to US-4 west. Follow US-4 about 10 miles.

SIGN YOU'VE REACHED KILLINGTON: You're suddenly surrounded by prepsters in Prada sunglasses and North Face who summer in Newport.

WHERE TO DROP YOUR BAGS...

IF YOU'RE A SKI BUM: Stay at the Mountain Sports Inn (813 Killington Road, 802-422-3315, mountainsportsinn.com). You know it ain't fancy when the description begins: "You will find these rooms very clean." But hey, all you need is a safe place to rest your head. Standard accommodations run $85–$125, including a continental breakfast. You can take the public bus to the slopes.



IF YOU'RE AN HEIR TO ROSSIGNOL: If only the Pitcher Inn were just a bit closer. Alas, the mountainside Killington Grand Resort Hotel (228 E. Mountain Road, 802-422-5001, killington.com) will have to do. Opt for a two- or three-bedroom penthouse with a full kitchen and dining area. Cook not included, but there's a spa on the property. The two-bedroom penthouse ranges from $450–$1,200.

EMPTY FRIDGE? HEAD HERE FOR BASICS LIKE BUD AND BREAD: The Phat Italian (2384 Killington Road, 802-422-7428, thephatitalian.com) has beer and wine, including local microbrews like Long Trail from the next town over. Make a slopeside picnic with Italian dipping oils, marinated mushrooms, pesto and baguettes. Or just order the namesake sandwich, a vegan's nightmare with prosciutto, soppressata, capicola and fresh mozzarella.

PLACE TO CURB YOUR CAFFEINE HEADACHE: Early risers will be stoked to find Sunup Bakery (2250 Killington Road, 802-422-3865) brewing coffee at 6:30 in the morning. Carb-load with an egg-and-cheese on oatmeal/whole-wheat bread, muffins in flavors like blueberry and pumpkin, or a raspberry–cream cheese Danish. All of the above is house-made (even the Danish dough), and you can fuel up for about five bucks.

WHERE TO SPEND YOUR BREAKFAST CALORIES: Get to Johnny Boy's Pancake House (945 Killington Road, 802-422-4411) early for the usual suspects like omelets and daily specials. If you want to fill out your ski pants, tackle the Gut Buster—a double order of pancakes, eggs, bacon, sausage and toast, plus home fries. Prices range from $5.95–$8.25. You'll feel at home among the Red Sox pics.

SIGN YOU'VE REACHED STOWE: You're suddenly surrounded by hipsters in Smith sunglasses and Patagucci who summer on the Vineyard.

WHERE TO DROP YOUR BAGS... IF YOU'RE A SKI BUM: At the Golden Eagle Resort (511 Mountain Road, 802-253-4811, goldeneagleresort.com), "resort" means spa and fitness center with indoor and outdoor pools. It doesn't mean fancy accommodations. The rooms do the trick, though, with refrigerators and coffee makers. The superior (aka standard) starts at around $109, and you can walk to Stowe Village. IF YOU'RE AN HEIR TO ROSSIGNOL: Thankfully for you, Stowe Mountain Lodge (7412 Mountain Road, 802-253-3560, stowemountainlodge.com) opened in 2008. The slopeside resort feels more Aspen than Stowe, with its rustic chandeliers and overstuffed sofas in chic spaces adorned in wood and stone. Running about $3,853, the four-bedroom residences feature balconies with mountain views. Are you a celeb? They also offer private check-in and a personal concierge.

EMPTY FRIDGE? HEAD HERE FOR BASICS LIKE BUD AND BREAD: Mac's Market (88 S. Main St., 802-253-4576) has all the essentials, but it's the local products (and small size) that lend it charm. Pick up Drew's dressing and Vermont Pepper Works sauces to flavor the organic produce in your cart. There's also Green Mountain coffee, Butternut maple syrup and artisanal bread for French toast at breakfast. Mac's carries beer and wine, as well.

PLACE TO CURB YOUR CAFFEINE HEADACHE: Harvest Market (1031 Mountain Road, 802-253-3800, harvestatstowe.com) is ground zero for gourmands in Stowe. While you sip a skinny latte from the coffee bar and nibble on a lemon muffin (baked fresh every morning), peruse prepared foods like the Tuscan white-bean salad. Harvest also makes its own bread, which goes well with the charcuterie, cheese and wine. A coffee and a carb costs about $6.

WHERE TO SPEND YOUR BREAKFAST CALORIES: Head to McCarthy's (454 Mountain Road, 802-253-8626) for breakfast in a setting that screams New England with wooden skis on the wall and wooden booths. The food, too, is deliciously rustic, from the house-made granola to the sticky buns. Gluttons will appreciate the combination platter, which includes two pancakes, French Toast, or waffles; two eggs; and two bacon, sausage or home fries. Prices range from $3.59–$7.99.

GEAR UP: Don't head for the hills before hitting AJ's Ski & Sports (350 Mountain Road, 800-226-6257, ajssportinggoods.com). With 33 years of trail-cred under its Prana belt, the stocked store offers an all-mountain rental package of skis, boots and poles, or board, boots and bindings, starting at $26 a day. It's open 8 am–9 pm December through April, in case you need to grab an extra pair of foot-warmers or shoot the snow with the knowledgeable staff.

NEED LESSONS? Look like you were born with your ski boots on after taking a class at Stowe Mountain Resort (5781 Mountain Road, 802-253-3681, stowe.com/equipment/lessons/). With some 300 instructors, the resort caters to everyone from wobbly beginners to confident carvers. Check out the Web site for details on group ($44-60), one-on-one ($100–$135) and women's-only lessons that run one to six hours. Shame's not a teaching tool here, so you won't be forced to learn with three-year-olds—unless that's your thing.

GRAB THEIR HELMETS AND DITCH THE KIDDIES: Your kids will actually want to attend Stowe Ski & Snowboard School at the Stowe Mountain Resort (5781 Mountain Road, 802-253-3861, stowe.com/equipment/lessons). Classes are divided by age group, with tikes six weeks through three years old enrolled in the licensed Cubs Daycare ($97–$131 a day), and children up to 14 in a combination of daycare and lessons ($122–$165 a day). Only those ages 5 and up can receive snowboard instruction.

STELLAR SLOPES: Fearless skiers looking to ditch the wimpy masses make a beeline for the Front Four (a harrowing, steep course), Nosedive (rated double-black) and the Chin Clip (with winding paths and continuous moguls). There's also new terrain at Spruce Peak, which rises to 3,390 feet. It has skinny trails with snow that often gets overlooked. And ask the locals for extreme off-piste options.

ACTIVITIES FOR SNOW-PHOBES: If your idea of hell is, well, cold, pamper yourself in town. Catch a new release while sipping a cocktail at the Stowe Cinema 3 Plex (Route 108 Mountain Road, 802-253-4678). Shop Stowe Village—we recommend Bear Pond Books (38 Main St., 802-253-8236), Green Mountain Fine Art Gallery (64 South Main St., 802-253-1818, greenmountainfineart.com), and Stowe Kitchen Bath & Linens (1813 Mountain Road, 800-244-6813, stowekitchen.net). Or sit perfectly still at the Top Notch Vermont Day Spa (4000 Mountain Road, 800-451-8686, topnotchresort.com/spa.php), featuring more than 120 treatments in a 35,000-square-foot space.

GATHER THE GANG FOR LUNCH: You've made it to the top of the FourRunner Quad Lift, but a subzero gale has turned your backside into something out of the freezer aisle and your nose into a spigot. Not to mention, you've got to pee. Open 9:30 am–3 pm, the Octagon Café & Gallery (802-253-3000) is a mountaintop hideaway offering hot drinks, grilled flatbread sandwiches and some of the best views in Vermont. If you can tear your gaze away from the windows, check out the paintings by locals in the cafe's Frog Hollow Art Gallery.

KICK OFF YOUR BOOTS AT APRÈS-SKI: Spruce Camp Base Lodge (802-253-3000, stowe.com), Stowe's luxury hub of shopping and dining, opened last year as part of the resort's $400-million-dollar facelift. Fretted with pale timber, the complex is part alpine mall, part lifesaver. A grand fireplace in the Spruce Camp Bar is the perfect antidote to hypothermia, as is the list of espresso drinks, stronger tipples and gourmet s'mores ($7), served from 4-6 pm. For weightier ballast, the Great Room Grill cooks up pub grub like pork quesadillas ($13) and grilled artisan sausage ($12) from 3-6 pm.

REWARD YOURSELF AT DINNER: Whimsical touches like painted moons lend romance to the Blue Moon Café (35 School St., 802-253-7006, bluemoonstowe.com), an intimate spot serving dishes with an emphasis on local produce, like lamb steak with white-bean puree, roasted garlic and rosemary crumbs (entrées approximately $25). Likewise, Vermont farms are the focus of the menu at the Whip Bar & Grill, set in the merry olde New England ambience of the Green Mountain Inn (18 Main St., 800-253-7302, greenmountaininn.com). Dishes like roast Quebec duckling with a brandied-ginger glaze ($22.95) should satisfy fickle foodies.

NIGHTSPOT FOR THOSE IN THE KNOW: Self-declared "party spot" the Matterhorn (4969 Mountain Road, 802-253-8198, matterhornbar.com) is a casual riverside restaurant that manages to successfully combine pub grub, live music and a sushi bar. The entertainment ranges from rock to dance, with an emphasis on the "party" aspect. Up the road, Piecasso Pizzeria and Lounge (1899 Mountain Road, 802-253-4411, piecasso.com) enlivens its menu of New York pies ($20.25, large; $15, small) with a martini list and a heady bar scene. Visiting bands, ladies' nights and drink specials should keep you from feeling lonely.

WHERE TO MATE WITH A LOCAL: A barn-like nightclub/restaurant that makes an art of cold microbrews and Jäger shots, the Rusty Nail Bar & Grille (1190 Mountain Road, 802-253-6245, rustynailbar.com) can get noisy, but that's the point. In the winter, hit the outdoor Ice Bar before sweating on the dance floor. Plentiful suds also lubricate the social scene at the Shed Restaurant and Brewery (1859 Mountain Road, 802-253-4364), a brewpub with seven house beers, a large dining room and a pub area, plus live music on Wednesdays. Try the Mountain Ale, which has a high-enough alcohol content that the locals call it "economy ale" (you only need to order two).

For more information, visit gostowe.com.

GEAR UP: Nobody likes to see a city slicker sliding down the slopes in jeans. Get the right equipment at Black Dog Sports (133 East Mountain Road, 802-422-4281, blackdogdeals.com), which carries clothing lines like Mountain Hardware and Ripzone. You'll also find skis and snowboards at this friendly store, where rentals range from $20–$90, depending on the activity. Owner Dave Manning gives a mean tune-up—and counts members of the U.S. Freestyle Team among his clients. Talk about keeping good company.

NEED LESSONS? Snowshed Base Lodge (4001 Killington Road, 800-923-9444) will have you looking like Shaun White in no time (hair not included). Take one- or two-day group lessons ($130–$195), or hourly private sessions ($109–$479), with Killington's skilled instructors. If you've already passed Snowplowing 101, a quick refresher course ($59–$65) should work wonders. You can numb your sore glutes at the Long Trail Pub afterward.

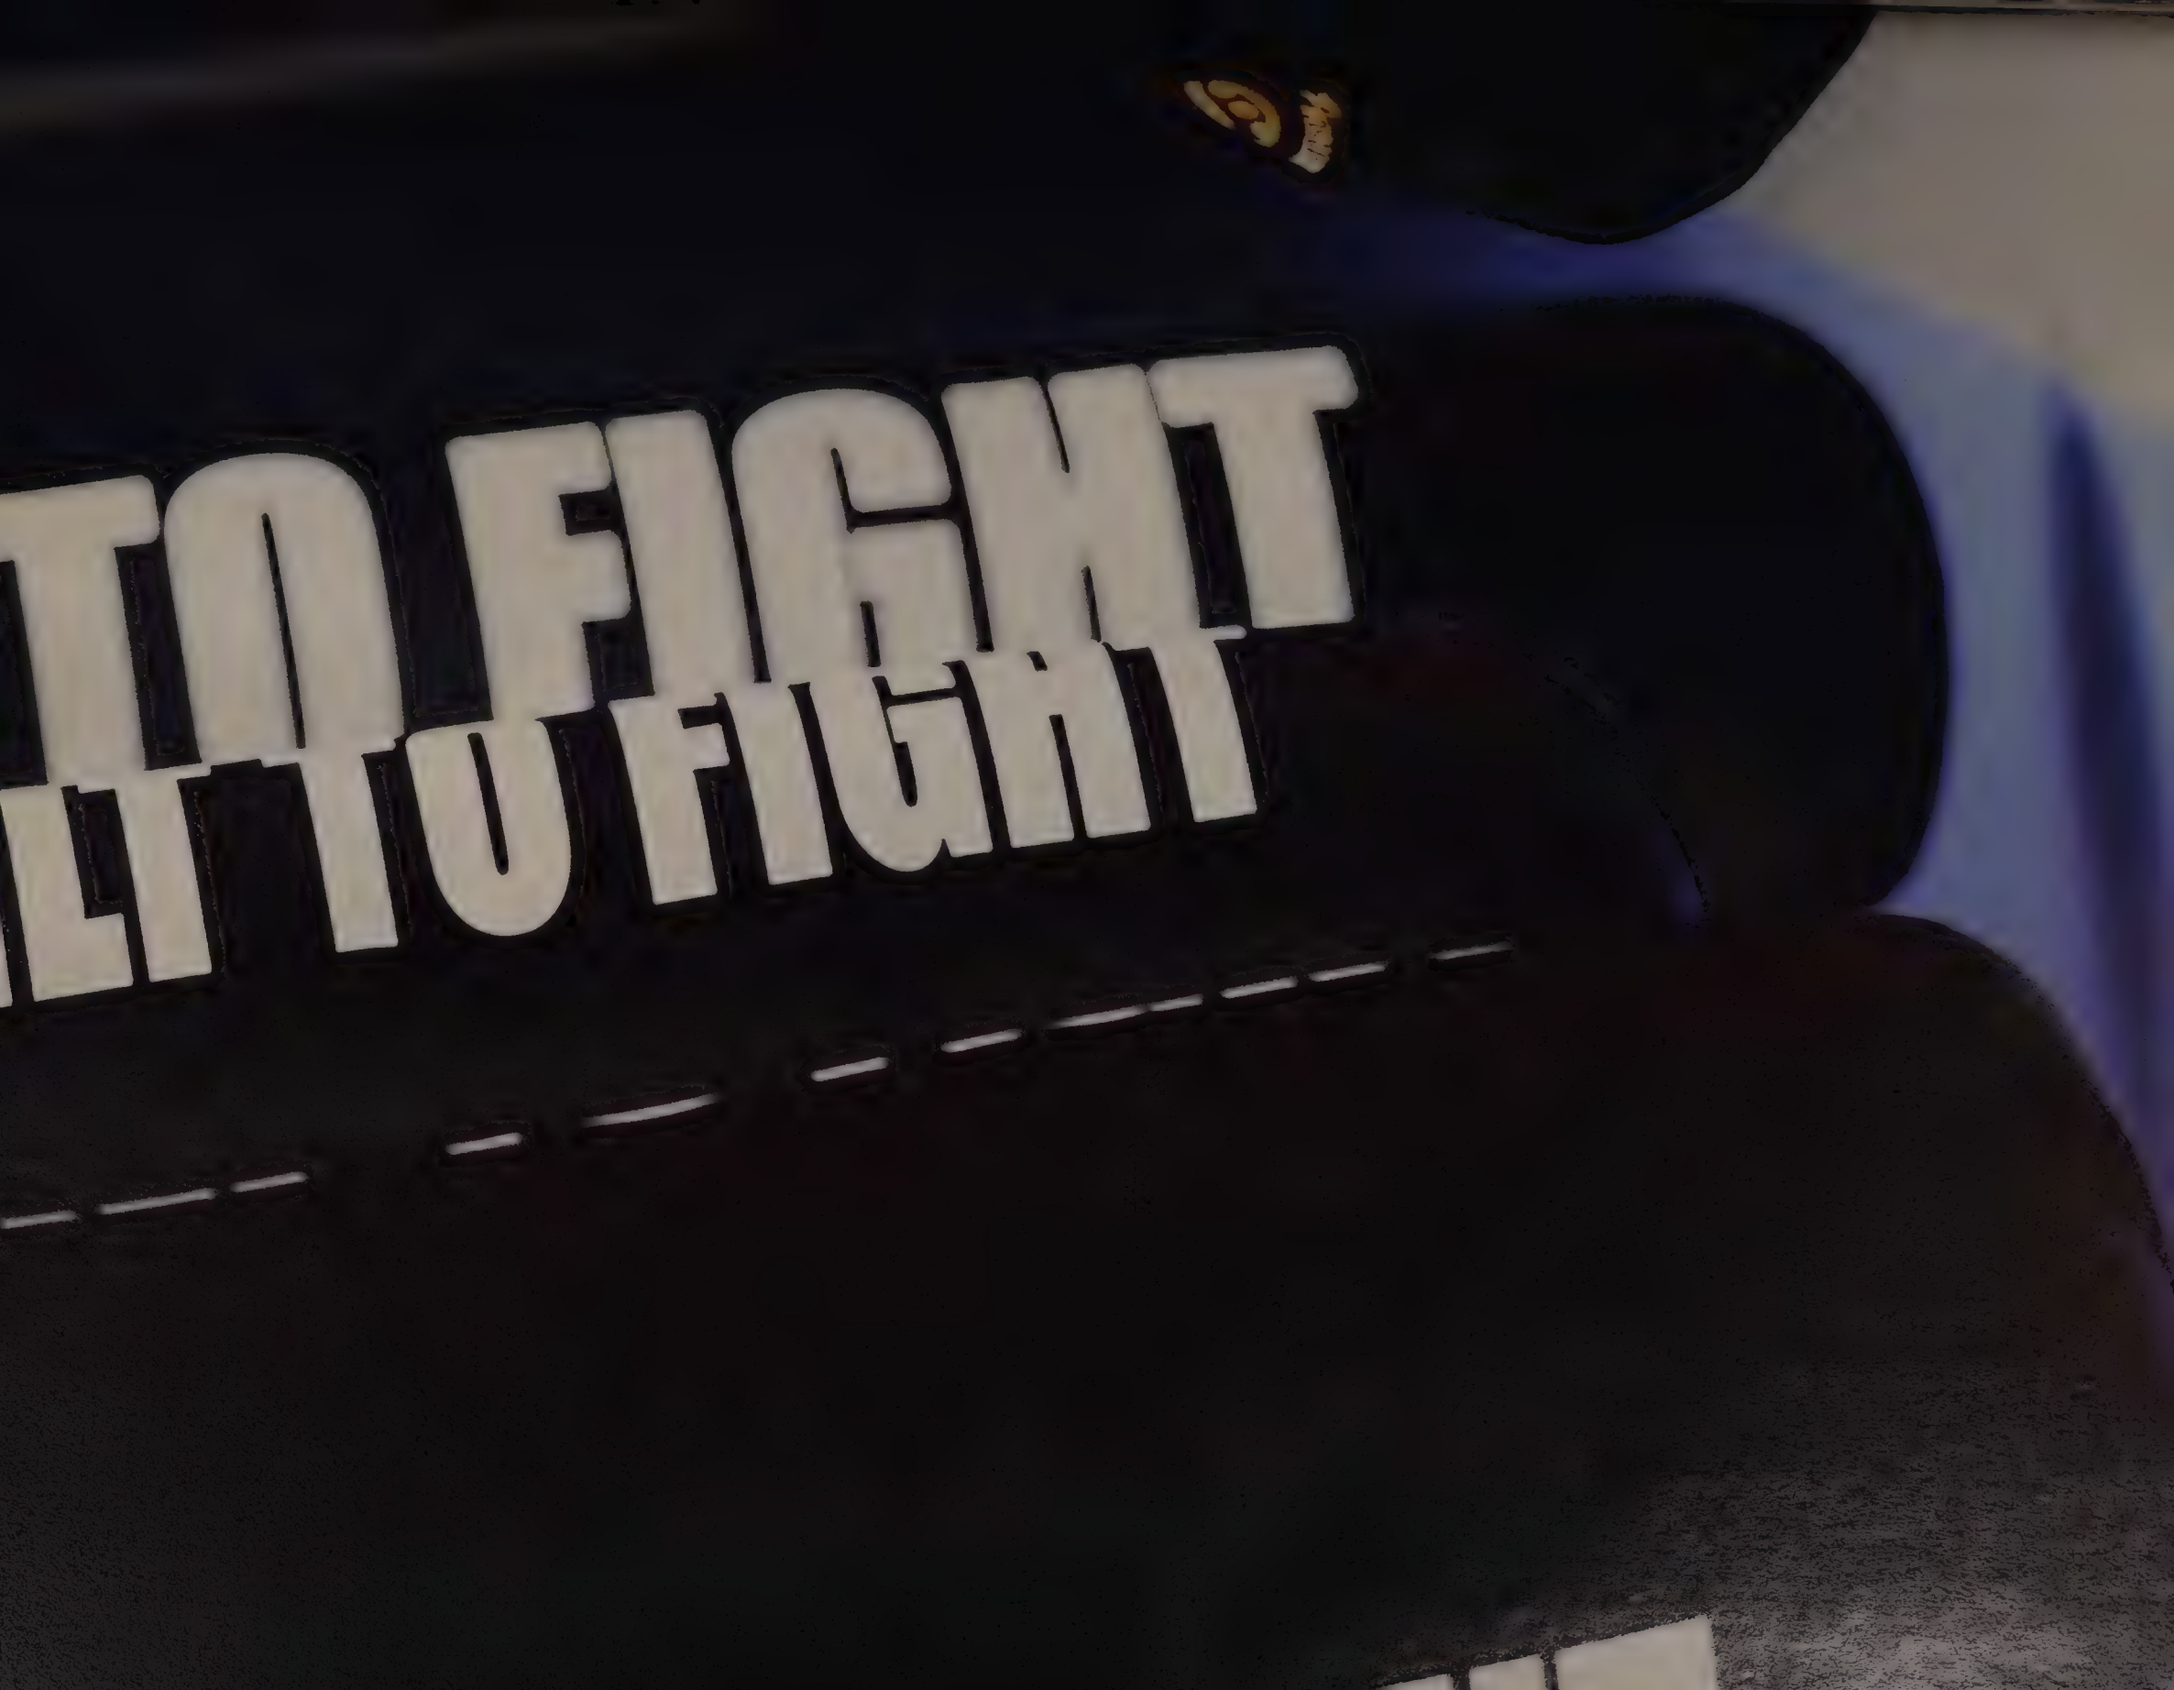
GRAB THEIR HELMETS AND DITCH THE KIDDIES: Don't strap your kids to a ski leash. Instead drop them at Ramshead Lodge (4763 Killington Road, 800-621-6867), which caters to children ages 2–18. The school teaches skiing and snowboarding in half- and full-day sessions ($105–$180); the latter includes a morning and an afternoon lesson (in groups of three or five), a yummy lunch of chicken nuggets or the like, and daycare. Private instruction is also available for the shy set.

STELLAR SLOPES: Nothing sucks more than waiting in an epic lift line. The Juggernaut solves that problem with seven miles of powder (none of the fake stuff here so check weather conditions first). One of the longest runs in the East, the Jug was designed with skiers in mind; snowboarders should hit the Great Eastern Trail, which is shorter but has killer views. If dodging trees is your thing, try Patsy's, a wicked black diamond.

ACTIVITIES FOR SNOW-PHOBES: You've escaped to the mountains, but that doesn't have to mean countless hours spent playing Monopoly and singing Kumbaya. Paramount Theatre in Rutland (30 Center St., 802-775-0903, paramountlive.org) features live music, comedy and Broadway productions in a Victorian space. Movie screenings typically take place Friday and Saturday nights. If you're in the mood to shop for something other than ski gear, take an afternoon trip to Woodstock, and browse the boutiques and art galleries. Start, end or spend your entire day at the Woods Resort & Spa (53 Woods Lane, 802-422-3139, woodsresortandspa.com), indulging in such services as paraffin dips ($100) and facials ($60–$170).

GATHER THE GANG FOR LUNCH: This is a meal that's always great, in theory. In reality, every member of the group soon degenerates into a Goldilocks of the mountain: Someone's too hot, someone's too cold, someone's boots are too tight. (That may not be one of the original complaints.) Thankfully, Long Trail Pub at Snowshed Lodge offers delicious, Vermont-brewed beer. Buy everyone a pint and enjoy your cheddar-ale soup in peace.

KICK OFF YOUR BOOTS AT APRÈS-SKI: Steeped in mountain history, Lookout Bar & Grill (2190 Killington Road, 802-422-5665, lookoutvt.com) offers a comfortable place to drink a Switchback while watching the last of the diehards slide down the slopes. Lighter fare, like soups and salads, fill the reserves and leave room for dinner, while HD-TVs, a pool table and wing specials (6 for $2) please patrons who prefer the term "happy hour" to "après ski."



REWARD YOURSELF AT DINNER: With vaulted ceilings, chandeliers and a roaring fireplace, Hemingway's (4988 U.S. Route 4, 802-422-3886, hemingwaysrestaurant.com) meets your expectations of a classic ski-town restaurant. Featuring a top wine program and tailored tasting menus, Hemingway's also exceeds them. But sometimes you just don't want to schlep your sore ass too far. So head to Choices (2820 Killington Road, 802-422-4030), where you can plop down at the bar and eat like a king (of the mountain) with a smorgasbord of rotisserie meats (leg of lamb, $20.75).

NIGHTSPOT FOR THOSE IN THE KNOW: Offering the best in one-stop hopping, Outback Pizza (2841 Killington Road, 802-422-9885, killingtonsbest.com) boasts live music and wood-fired pizzas like the Mondo Mia ($20.95, large; $17.95, small) containing "everything but the kitchen sink," as the menu puts it. After that, haul yourself all the way to the next room for a DJ and dancing at the Tabu Nightclub. Or do it the other way around. Or eat pizza twice. You're on vacation. Plus, a free shuttle can take you home.

WHERE TO MATE WITH A LOCAL: If this item is on your checklist, integrity may not be your first concern. The Wobbly Barn (2226 Killington Road, 802-422-6171, wobblybarn.com) has a steakhouse on the first floor and a meat market on the second, complete with live music and space for 600 revelers. If you need the odds stacked even more in your favor, try the Pickle Barrel (1741 Killington Road, 802-422-3035, picklebarrelnightclub.com), featuring three levels and two stages that have welcomed acts like Ziggy Marley, Jason Mraz and Snoop Dogg. Chances are you can find a townie, or at least someone who'll fake it for you.

ULTIMATE FIGHTER KENNY FLORIAN PURSUES HIS PASSION.

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY | PHOTOGRAPHS BY KERRY BRETT

FEELING THE FLO

MAYBE KENNY FLORIAN KNOWS

and brushes it off as a Newbury Street norm. Or maybe Florian's so focused on the topic that he doesn't notice at all, but he's being watched. He's being watched by a man he's never met, an accountant from Los Angeles, who'll gladly wait as long as it takes—and it'll take two hours—to get his attention. He's being watched by a Trident Booksellers & Cafe waitress who's waiting for just the right time to close out his tab. He's being watched by Ben Henderson, his friend and training partner. Henderson places a couple of novels written by a brilliant storyteller, Neil Gaiman, on Florian's table and then sits nearby, listening to Florian tell a story of his own. It's nonfiction, and devoted equally to his Brazilian mistress as to God.

"It all started when I was a kid, and I saw martial arts movies, Bruce Lee movies, Chinese kung fu theater with my brothers, you name it. It was something about them that was fascinating. It was a religious experience. And when I eventually started training, it was a religious experience. I felt a peace. I felt a connection with something higher than myself. It's like you're getting closer to God. That love, that serenity.

"And it wasn't about fighting. It wasn't about hitting someone. Just the perfection of how to throw a punch. There was something about it that was beautiful to me. I definitely felt that mind-body-spirit connection that I didn't get from other sports."

Florian, 33, leans forward, eager to explain how the son of a Dover thoracic surgeon became a mixed martial artist and one of the five best ultimate fighters in his weight class. He's 5 feet 10 inches, 155 pounds, with full, dark hair, a look that often draws comparisons to actor Ben Stiller. But his profession—reminiscent of the gladiator performances in the Colosseum—has left him with a nose like Owen Wilson's. In his sport, champions often have to turn down or delay opponents because they're too injured to fight. He talks about expecting to break your nose and the pain that comes with mixing so many disciplines—from kickboxing to wrestling—and it suddenly becomes amazing to think that about 10 years ago he was the guy a couple cubicles down from yours.

As a 23-year-old Boston College graduate, Florian had a job at a translation services company in Brighton. He was the one translating prospectuses and 401(k)s, working with the likes of Fidelity and T. Rowe Price. He was married. He was less than a year removed from being a BC athlete, a midfielder on the soccer team. At a glance, his life was the nice snapshot you expect to see on a mantel.

But the Florian story isn't about appearances and expectations. The routine made him restless. He didn't want a life defined by numbers, by cute picture frames, by his father's profession, by his affluent hometown, or by whom he resembled. So he either pursued a different life or the life pursued him. It's not clear who chased whom.

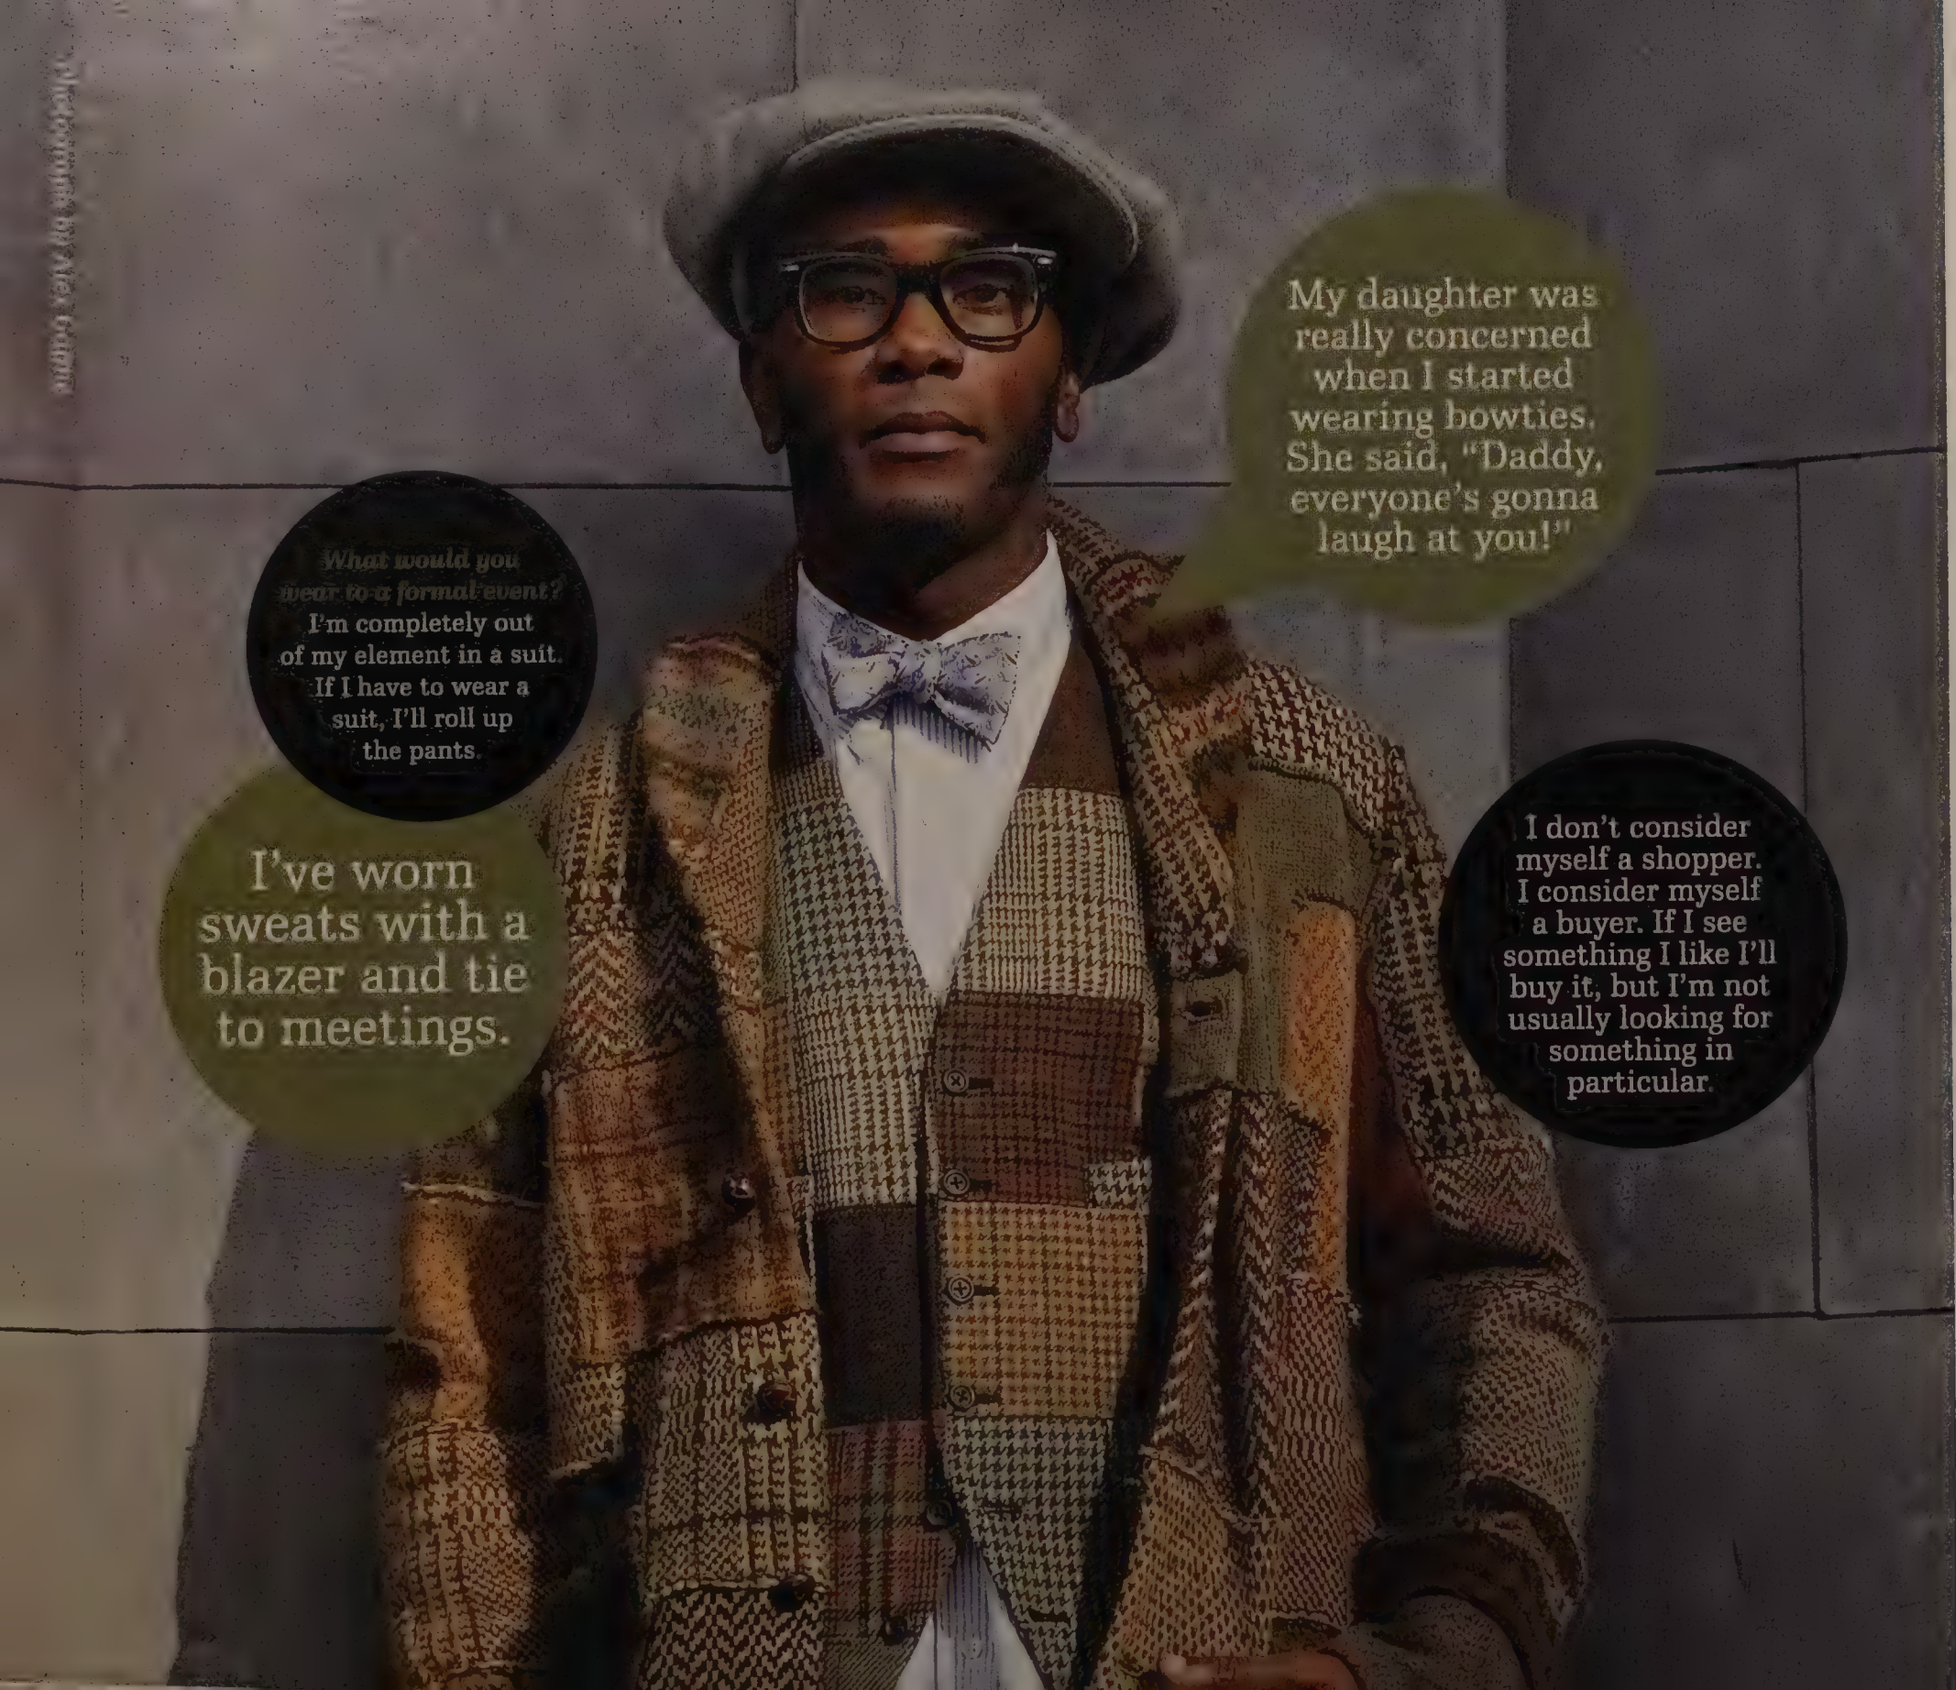
"I felt like I had this mistress on the side called Brazilian jiujitsu,'' he says. "Soccer was my first love, but I was thinking about Brazilian jiujitsu all the time. It occupied all my thoughts. When I was at work, I'd be counting the hours until I could leave and go train and teach. I used to say, 'I'm going to go from working full-time to part-time and doing jiujitsu.... I don't know how it's going to work, but it is going to work.' Whatever else I was doing, I was thinking about it. Literally, in my sleep.

"I'd make a little money and take a trip to Brazil. Everyone thought I was crazy. I had a wife at the time, and my obsession put a strain on things. She'd say, 'How are you gonna make money doing Brazilian jiujitsu? How are you gonna pay the bills?' I had no idea. I didn't care if I made any money. I didn't care if I made a dollar. I just kept putting money into training. I eventually grew apart from my wife, and we went our separate ways. It was one of those things where I wish I could've lived in Brazil or somewhere else and done jiujitsu all day. Nothing else mattered."

Brazilian jiujitsu is many things, including a martial art that consistently rewards the smart and well-trained fighter, regardless of size. It's a complex fight on the ground, where smaller and slighter men routinely outmaneuver fighters who outweigh them. It's such a balanced art form that any reference to the littler guy as the underdog, without knowing his skills, is correctly seen as flawed logic.

In the early days of mixed martial arts (MMA), when there was no structure in the rules or the weight classes, 15-year-old Keith Florian was intrigued by a fighter he saw on TV. He called his brother, Kenny, who was 17 at the time, and raved about a "skinny Brazilian guy who wraps up and beats the big guy." The skinny Brazilian was Royce Gracie, a UFC legend and a member of Brazil's First Family, so to speak, of jiujitsu. The young Florian boys studied and taped all of Gracie's fights and practiced moves in the basement. They had a tiny rug on a cement floor, yet it didn't stop them from picking each other up and slamming one another to the ground. They eventually got a chance to train with Gracie.



"He became our new Bruce Lee," Florian says. "Except we could see him and actually talk to him. I never imagined that I would be a fighter; I just wanted to see how my Brazilian jiujitsu skills translated to a fight."

They translated into wins, success and international fame. Specifically, 13 wins and four losses over his career, as well as a hosting gig on ESPN.com. Then, last August in Philadelphia, Florian took on BJ Penn for the lightweight title. Penn studies Brazilian jiujitsu, too, and he was faster and stronger than Florian that night. It took Florian a week-and-a-half to steel himself to watch the fight footage, and when he did, he saw it alone with no volume. He briefly considered retirement, but instead he parted ways with one of his trainers, Mark DellaGrotte, while sticking with Montreal trainer Firas Zahabi. DellaGrotte has since complained about tension in the gym between himself and Florian's brother Keith, who remains on the team as an advisor.

"My brother has always looked out for me because he wants me to do well," Florian counters, slowly choosing his words. "He has no other motive than for me to perform well and train well. And some other people have other motives. I guess I'll just leave it at that."

The coffee is gone. The tab has been paid. Florian is looking ahead. Not just to his next match on Dec. 12 against fighter Clay Guida, but to his future in the sport. Through his MMA success, he can now say that friends include everyone from Phillies outfielder Shane Victorino to Cypress Hill rapper B-Real to actress Laura Prepon. He's achieved fame, even though that was never his goal.

Still, the cycle continues. Kenny Florian followed Bruce Lee, and then Royce Gracie became Florian's Lee. Now, as Florian heads toward the door, he's stopped by a native Ethiopian living in L.A. His name is Tsegaye Tshome, an accountant who says he loves to fight. He saw Florian walk into Trident, and he followed him hoping to take a picture together. A couple of hours and a few cups of coffee later, Florian poses with Tshome. And, with a simple gesture, Florian has become Tshome's Lee: The visitor said he wanted to work out, and the man who sees God in jiujitsu invited him to his gym in Brookline. ✖✖✖

My daughter was really concerned when I started wearing bowties. She said, "Daddy, everyone's gonna laugh at you!"
What would you wear to a formal event?
I'm completely out of my element in a suit. If I have to wear a suit, I'll roll up the pants.
I've worn sweats with a blazer and tie to meetings.
I don't consider myself a shopper. I consider myself a buyer. If I see something I like I'll buy it, but I'm not usually looking for something in particular.

NAME: Byron "B Styles" Beaman AGE: 40

WHAT'S UP, CHOC?

THERE'S PLENTY OF time to give up your vices after New Year's. Not that chocolate is a vice. If the delights crafted by Taza Chocolate are any indication, then it's less a sugary dessert than a lesson in multiculturalism and social responsibility. On Dec. 5, the Somerville factory opens its doors to the public to give the skinny on making organic, fairly traded, stone-ground chocolate in the Mesoamerican tradition. Sip Oaxacan–style cocoa and try discs of the candy infused with ingredients ranging from salted almonds to guajillo chili and yerba mate. No golden ticket required.

Gifts that Keep on Giving

Dreaming of a Green Christmas

"It's the thought that counts" is no longer an excuse for crappy gifts. On Dec. 15, head to AFH EpiCenter to shop For the Love of Art, benefiting Artists for Humanity Boston. There you'll find colorful ReVision tables made from reclaimed magazines, bamboo-knit dresses and other green presents created by local teens. And should your secret Santa snag you that Earth Warrior T-shirt you already own, remember the mantra of the eco-friendly holidays: Reduce, reuse, regift.

Men on a Mission

In Good Company

Talk about finding humor in unexpected places. Leper colonies make for good laughs in The Three (Un)Wise Men. In 11:11 Theatre Company's satirical take on the biblical story, Balthasar and his two thieving buddies embark on a raucous road trip. The play, a study in fame and fortune, runs Dec. 11–19 at the Factory Theatre. Kate Vander Wiede

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

Amelia ★ ½ The troubled life and times of America's foremost female aviator is a story overflowing with promise. Instead, director Mira Nair has mustered up the safest, most boring movie imaginable. Hilary Swank makes Amelia Earhart dull, which is no small feat considering how significant she really was. By all accounts, Earheart was a prickly, horny number, carrying on with her husband (Richard Gere, in his sad, Unfaithful, cuckold mode) and Ewan McGregor's dashing Gene Vidal. Swank and Gere are stuck doing false 1930s movie accents that can't help but alienate the audience. Swank sounds like a Katharine Hepburn pull-string doll. Overall, Amelia plays like a Wikipedia listing of Earheart's accomplishments, never summoning a real point of view. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Antichrist ★★ Half genius, half huckster, Danish filmmaker Lars Von Trier too often lets some fascinating heretical notions fall victim to his provocateur posturing. The controversial Antichrist is both Von Trier's least interesting movie and also his most viscerally pulverizing. This time around he's all audacity, all the time, and even if the film's line of philosophical inquiry is downright laughable, the wily bastard is almost gifted enough to pull it off. Almost. Willem Dafoe and Charlotte Gainsbourg star as a married couple reeling from their toddler's accidental death. Retreating to a creaky country cottage, embarrassingly christened Eden, the two fall into a mutually destructive rut of bad therapy, sado-masochistic sex, talking animals and hideous sequences of genital mutilation. Von Trier is riffing on some lame, pretentious angle wherein Dafoe's rational "Man" loses his battle to domesticate Gainsbourg's feral "Womanhood" amid the twisted power of "Nature," yet there are images that will haunt your dreams. It's easy to snicker at and impossible to shake off. (At Kendall Square.)

Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans ★★★ ½ A remake in name but definitely not in spirit, Werner Herzog's twisted riff on Abel Ferrara's grueling 1992 passion play re-imagines tragedy as farce. It's an extremely naughty, high-spirited lark carried off by the sort of go-for-broke Nicolas Cage performance we haven't seen in at least a decade. Hunched and swaggering, his eyes popping out of his head, Cage plays a drug-addled, gambling-addicted, pervert policeman investigating a drug-land slaughter. The script, by TV-vet William Finkelstein, is fairly rote, small-screen procedural stuff. The fun lies in the utter indifference Herzog and Cage display for the mystery at hand, treating it as a mere pretext for bizarre behavior and oddball non sequiturs. It's the kind of sublimely silly movie in which plot strands work themselves out through dumb luck, so we can spend more time on lucky crack-pipes, brutal interrogations of elderly women and a pack of singing iguanas. (At Boston Common and Coolidge Corner.)

The Blind Side ★ The inspirational true story of the Baltimore Ravens' Michael Oher becomes one of the year's most inadvertently offensive movies, thanks to Sandra Bullock's rampaging ego and the kind of unconscious racism Hollywood does better than anyone else. Oher, the troubled son of a crack addict, spent much of his childhood homeless before being adopted by a rich, white family who kindly helped him fulfill his potential. But instead of focusing on Oher's moving struggle, The Blind Side spends two hours inviting us to worship the selflessness of his new mom, played by Bullock as an amalgamation of Julia Roberts' least appealing qualities. She fires off sassy one-liners in endless glamour shots, while the rest of the cast nods approvingly and tells us how great she is. Oher, played by Quinton Aaron, is given no thoughts of his own. He just thanks her profusely and does what he's told. This isn't a movie about adopting a son; it's about adopting a pet. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Box ★ ½ Donnie Darko director Richard Kelly takes a perfectly decent Twilight Zone episode and stretches it out for two hours in this infuriatingly obtuse follow-up to his equally incoherent Southland Tales. Based on a short story by Richard Matheson, the plot boils down to a simple question of morality: Would you accept a million dollars if it meant that someone you've never met would die? Unfortunately, Kelly has no concept of sim-

George Clooney's star continues to rise.

Up in the Air ★★★½
Starring George Clooney, Vera Farmiga, Anna Kendrick, Jason Bateman, JK Simmons and Danny McBride. Based on the novel by Walter Kirn. Screenplay by Jason Reitman and Sheldon Turner. Directed by Reitman. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Dale Robinette

THE THING THAT MAKES George Clooney such a great movie star is that he's always letting us know just how much he enjoys being George Clooney. His vintage charisma and self-deprecating humor allows him to get away with a carousing, bachelor lifestyle that most folks are pilloried for in the press. But Clooney gets a pass; probably because we'd all secretly like to be tagging along with him.

What's most interesting about Up in the Air, director Jason Reitman's sturdy, crowd-pleasing adaptation of a novel by Walter Kirn, is the way it allows Clooney to subtly deconstruct and criticize his popular persona. It's like a Clint Eastwood vehicle in the way it approaches the baggage we've brought into the theater regarding its star.

Which is fitting, as baggage is something foremost on the mind of Ryan Bingham, a slick, corporate hotshot played so well by Clooney, it's impossible to imagine anyone else in the role. Discovering perhaps the only growth industry in our recession, Bingham works for a freelance consulting corporation that fires people. On the road more than 300 days a year, he sets up shop in conference rooms across the country, breaking terrible news, offering severance packages and taking the heat that most bosses are too cowardly to confront. Bingham's act is polished, and he gently guides the downsized through the devastation, nimbly finding glimmers of hope to offer them for their uncertain futures.

He moonlights as a motivational speaker, preaching the gospel of a backpack. Bingham lives according to a carry-on philosophy: Relationships, possessions and entanglements are all things weighing down the backpack. He says you should empty it. Nobody gets to check any luggage when travelling with Ryan Bingham. His life is compartmentalized, his apartment is spartan, everything streamlined and attachment-free.

This is probably all well and good when you're on the road most of the year, but Bingham's perfectly ordered existence is knocked into disarray after a meeting with his boss (the effortlessly smarmy Jason Bateman). Up-and-comer Natalie (Anna Kendrick) has figured out that the company will save millions in travel and hotel fees if they downsize folks via video-conference instead of in person. Naturally, Bingham thinks this is the worst idea he's ever heard. For starters, it adds a cold and impersonal edge to an already unpleasant encounter. Worse, it means he'll have to stay at home and get a life.

> The movie doesn't just have wit and style, it has class.

Bad timing, as he's recently met his match in Vera Farmiga's Alex, a swaggering, sexy version of himself, similarly married to her career and on the road just as much, if not more. Their courtship begins with a funny, oddly alluring discussion of rental cars and frequent flyer miles, and before long they're performing post-coital laptop schedule checks, setting up assignations in hotels and convention centers. Bingham has always boasted about his empty backpack, but his chemistry with Alex has him wondering if his no-commitment lifestyle is really all he makes it out to be.

Up in the Air is the kind of confident, mainstream comedy we seldom see these days. Most studio movies are content to infantilize their characters, but Reitman, still just 32 years old, keeps a bracingly adult perspective. Modeled more on Billy Wilder than Judd Apatow, the movie doesn't just have wit and style, it has class.

Of course, the key to it all is watching Clooney learn to grow up and settle down, something which will probably never happen in real life. Clooney, the bastard, isn't just getting better looking as he ages. He's also becoming a better actor, learning how to do more with less and deftly underplaying some of the screenplay's clutzier elements.

There's a lovely, midmovie sequence set at the wedding of Bingham's sister (Melanie Lynskey) in snow-ridden Wisconsin. The family isn't exactly estranged, he's just never been there for them. They don't seem to know each other all that well. Bringing Farmiga as his date and re-exploring a hometown he hasn't seen in decades, Clooney's able to suggest his character's sudden, midlife yearning for roots without being too demonstrative about it. This is quiet, skillful work. In an unfortunate misstep, Reitman occasionally cuts to documentary interviews with people who have lost their jobs. These bits undercut the movie's seductive Hollywood gloss and over-explain the subtext of scenes that worked just fine on their own. Far more effective is his visual command of interchangeable hotel rooms, airport lobbies and anonymous office parks. Up in the Air's most haunting quality is this vision of a franchised, homogenized America as a sterile limbo from which we long for Bingham to escape. ✖✖✖ plicity, and his stories tend to take the path of most resistance on their way to unwieldy ends. Somehow NASA, the NSA, Martian radio-wave cameras, lightening and chronic nosebleeds all come into play, as does a chase through the Boston Public Library and several watery portals to other dimensions. James Marsden and Cameron Diaz show off horrific Southern accents playing the struggling married couple who answer the central question incorrectly. Kelly still has a gift for creating an ominous sense of dread, but his movie doesn't make any sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bright Star ★★★ The unlikely, inevitably doomed love affair between poet John Keats and fashionista Fanny Brawne might sound like the fodder of teary romance novels or tedious Masterpiece Theater episodes, but writer/director Jane Campion is after something else entirely. Campion, a doggedly idiosyncratic artist best known for The Piano, remains in awe of harsh landscapes and rumpled costumes. Often filmmakers embalm their period pieces with golden lighting and auspicious production design. Campion goes the other way, wrestling Keats' idealized lyrical interludes into a grimy, matter-of-fact reality. I always say you know a movie is working if you start to feel its weather, and Bright Star made me put my jacket back on. Sadly, Keats is a bit of a drip. Played by I'm Not There's Ben Whishaw, he comes off as a mopey emo-boy. Better are Abbie Cornish's obstinate, impassioned Fanny and Paul Schneider's revelatory supporting turn as Keats' boorish, protective patron. Still, nothing can top this movie's tactile sense of place. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Capitalism: A Love Story ★★ Michael Moore's latest muddled provocation feels like a flabby greatest-hits tour from a band all too aware it's become irrelevant. Moore has basically been making the same movie over and over again since his razor-sharp 1989 debut Roger & Me, and the shtick has worn awfully. Again, we've got the cheeky use of old movie footage, grossly oversimplified explanations of complex events, ironic music cues and a condescending voiceover narration. As always, Moore steps in front of the camera for a few grandstanding stunts that only end up harassing security guards and other working people he claims to champion. Taking aim at the odious financial skullduggery that capsized our economy, Moore trots out a string of disconnected outrages, extracting pathos from the victims and wagging his finger at the higher-ups. By the end, even Moore seems to have given up, admitting that he's tired of doing this and something needs to change. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

An Education ★★ ½ In what's sure to be Roman Polanski's favorite film of the year, dazzling newcomer Carey Mulligan stars as a 16-year-old schoolgirl who falls under the sway of Peter Sarsgaard's suave 30-something hepcat in gloomy, post-war Britain. Adapted by novelist Nick Hornby from Lynn Barber's memoir, the movie takes a tender look back at statutory rape as a rite of passage, and it's a testament to some fine performances that the film only feels icky in retrospect. There's nobody better than Hornby at dissecting all the ways people like to define themselves through their tastes and fascinations, but in nearly every other respect, his screenplay is too fussy and neat for its own good. This is a very polite, middlebrow view of what must've actually been an extremely messy affair. Director Lone Scherfig keeps everything humming pleasantly along, with even the inevitable betrayals and recriminations occurring at a genteel pitch. It's as if all the characters are afraid to raise their voices. The feel-good final reel is almost unforgivable. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Fantastic Mr. Fox ★★★ ½ Writer/director Wes Anderson's fastidious, sometimes suffocating, attention to costume detail and production design make his movies feel like they're taking place in dollhouses, so it makes sense that he would work with puppets. Rendered in hand-crafted, stop-motion animation, this marvelous adaptation of the Roald Dahl story may look like one of those Rankin-Bass holiday specials from the 1970s, but it still feels like a Wes Anderson film. It's got the filmmaker's dysfunctional family pathos and droll hipster humor, only with woodland animals instead of actors. George Clooney voices the title character, a reformed chicken-thief turned newspaper columnist itching to return to his criminal roots. His antics stoke the ire of three nasty farmers, and Mr. Fox and family find themselves on the run. Boasting bone-dry vocal turns from Meryl

Streep, Jason Schwartzman and Bill Murray, the movie feels like a summation of Anderson's career thus far, with certain scenes lifted almost directly from The Royal Tenenbaums and The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Informant! ★★★ ½ The exclamation point lets you know exactly how seriously director Steven Soderbergh is taking this true story of corporate malfeasance in the lysine industry. Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Invention of Lying ★ ½ Ricky Gervais, the comic mastermind who gave us the original The Office, as well as HBO's lacerating Extras, tones down his act and sucks up to mainstream romantic comedy fans in this waste of an inspired idea. Set in an alternate universe where nobody is capable of telling a fib, Ricky stars as the one man who learns how to lie. It's a cruel world where folks blab every unpleasant thought crossing their minds. At first, it looks like Gervais might have a smart satire showing just how crucial dishonesty is to our social contracts. Then he accidentally invents religion, and all bets are off. Gervais has no interest in exploring these fascinating comic conceits, instead settling for dull chick-flick formulas as he tries to win the heart of Jennifer Garner. So many ideas are ignored as we wait for the hot babe to fall for the homely schlub who wrote the movie. Who does Ricky think he is, Woody Allen? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Law Abiding Citizen ★ ½ Stupid even for an exploitative revenge fantasy, this risible hoot stars 300's Gerard Butler as the shattered father of a murdered family. Jamie Foxx's cool, career-

Dance, Dance It can take years to create a perfect ballet, but director Frederick Wiseman condenses the process to 159 minutes in his documentary La Danse. Screening at the Brattle Theatre Dec. 11–17, the film depicts the skill, dedication and rigor involved in being part of a world-renowned ensemble. Witness the inner workings of the Paris Opera Ballet Company, and discuss pliés, pirouettes and portraiture with Wiseman on opening night. Kate Vander Wiede

ist DA cuts a plea agreement, not realizing that Butler will emerge a decade later in full badass mode to declare war on the American justice system. He slaughters federal judges, innocent paralegals, unsuspecting cellmates and anybody else who dares interrupt his tedious "eye-for-an-eye" monologues. The filmmakers try to have their cake and eat it, too: prompting us to cheer for Butler whenever he kills a jerk, but asking for pathos if nicer folks are caught in the crossfire. There's no coherent statement, it's just Seven for Dummies, with Butler's plans growing more absurdly complicated and inadvertently hysterical. Foxx eventually takes up arms and bellows, "F his civil rights!" at which point the audience cheered so loudly that something inside of me died. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Men Who Stare at Goats ★★ ½ Half-formed comedic conceits spray like buckshot across director Grant Heslov's disappointingly cartoonish adaptation of Jon Ronson's exposé on the madness of military psych-ops. Ewan McGregor, who narrates every damn moment of the film, plays a depressed reporter following George Clooney's possibly insane ex-soldier into Baghdad during the early days of the Iraq War. On the road, Clooney tells a tale of the New Earth Army, a top-secret unit that attempted to train cadets in the paranormal arts. Believe it or not, most of this stuff is true. Unfortunately, Heslov's direction cheapens the material by going for broad buffoonery and slapstick where precision is required. Jeff Bridges recycles too many Dude-isms as a hippie squad leader, while Kevin Spacey tiresomely twirls his moustache as a cardboard villain. Everybody's mugging for the camera, but Clooney almost saves the film singlehandedly. Deftly deadpanning outrageous monologues, he plays it straight and sad, improbably getting us invested in this silliness. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paranormal Activity ★ Don't believe the hype. This $15,000 cheapie drew some fleeting attention at festivals a couple years ago and now arrives on a tsunami of tweets thanks to a massive, cynical marketing campaign from Paramount Pictures. Purporting to be the found home video footage of a spectacularly uninteresting couple (Katie Featherson and Micah Sloat), the movie chronicles Katie's troubles with a vaguely defined, undead stalker. This is the laziest, most annoying demon in recent film. What passes for scares involve the creature clomping around the attic like an annoying upstairs neighbor, or every once in awhile turning on the lights in an empty room. Nothing here is novel or even remotely believable. Filmmaker Oren Peli doesn't seem to understand that everyone already saw The Blair Witch Project 10 years ago. The closing shot provides one genuinely great jolt, and it turns out that was only recently added by Steven Spielberg. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Road ★★ If you've read Cormac McCarthy's Pulitzer-Prize–winning novel, you're probably wondering how it could possibly lend itself to a satisfying adaptation. The relentlessly grim tale of a man and his young son wandering through a post-apocalyptic wasteland, McCarthy's book is a collection of unsettling anecdotes lacking the kind of forward momentum that movies require. Rendered faithfully here by director John Hillcoat, The Road is a miserable slog through an ashen, ruined landscape, punctuated by random attacks from redneck cannibals. Viggo Mortensen stars as the father, appearing emaciated and ill, reciting chunks of the novel's prose in voiceover. Charlize Theron appears briefly in flashback as the mother, fleshing out a couple scenes McCarthy only suggested. Hillcoat supplies images of magnificent desolation, but it's still a hopeless dirge with no variation in tone. A guy and his kid pushing a shopping cart toward certain doom worked on the page, but the film leaves an audience with no point of entry. One note played well is still only one note. (At Boston Common.)

A Serious Man ★★★★ Grappling with mysteries on a deceptively mundane stage, the latest gem from Joel and Ethan Coen is about the silence of God. Set in a Minneapolis suburb circa 1967, the film stars Michael Stuhlbarg as a college physics professor and human doormat whose entire life begins to crumble one day with the kind of one-thing-after-another momentum that the Coens typically apply to their crime pictures. It's The Book of Job according to a couple of wisenheimer skeptics. Larry's search for celestial explanation leads him up the hierarchy of local rabbis in a series of agonizingly funny and fruitless counseling sessions and rambling parables. As usual, the Coens are being dismissed in some circles as snickering, nihilistic yuksters. But such a reading willfully ignores A Serious Man's deliberately open-ended, questioning structure. In the end, do any of us really have any choice but to accept the mystery? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

2012 ★★ With films like Independence Day, Godzilla and The Day After Tomorrow under his belt, director Roland Emmerich obviously has a hankering for mass destruction. With a plot based on the Mayan calendar's prediction of an apocalypse, this is his silliest fetishization of annihilation yet. John Cusack stars as a failed sci-fi writer and deadbeat dad who somehow finds time to patch things up with his family while speeding through earthquakes and outrunning flowing volcanoes. Danny Glover plays the sad sack president charged with preserving civilization as his pragmatic aide (Oliver Platt) butts heads with Chiwetel Ejiofor's idealistic scientist. If there's anything harrowing about hundreds of millions of people dying horrible deaths, this cheerfully tasteless movie doesn't dwell on it. Instead we get some plucky heroics, garish stereotypes and one extremely lucky dog. Most of the world perishes, but at least Cusack's daughter learns to stop wetting the bed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: New Moon ★ And you thought the first one was terrible? This second installment of Stephenie Meyer's awful ode to sexual repression is so glum, dreary and snail-paced, it feels like it plays in slow-motion. Pining, as always, for sparkly vampire Edward Cullen (Robert Pattinson, still looking vaguely embarrassed to be here), Kristen Stewart's depressed Bella pouts, whines and stares off into space a lot. With Edward out of the picture for most of the running time, she tries to distract herself with the happy, shirtless visage of Taylor Lautner's Jacob. But Bella has rotten luck with boys, as every guy who takes a shine to her seems to end up being some sort of supernatural beast. Though his waxed chest might lead you to believe otherwise, Jacob is actually a werewolf, and so we suffer through more of Meyer's lame mythology and lots of annoying, emo posturing. It takes an awfully long time for nothing to happen in New Moon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Where the Wild Things Are ★★★ ½ There's an almost unbearable undertow of melancholy in director Spike Jonze's arty adaptation of Maurice Sendak's 1963 picture book. It's an extraordinarily subjective experience, burrowing so deeply into the child's perspective that the movie works as a Rorschach test for viewers. Some are left completely cold, others in tears. Count me in the latter camp. Drawing out Sendak's sparse sentences to feature length, Jonze and his coscreenwriter Dave Eggers sketch the unhappy world of young Max (Max Records) with swiftness and clarity. Max is a lonely, angry child of divorce, who one night retreats into his imagination, where he becomes king of a wild band of beasts. Each of these marvelous, towering Muppets represents an aspect of Max's troubled home life, and their nonsensical games encompass the gamut of childhood anxieties, with petty jealousies and temper tantrums always circling back around to a gnawing fear of abandonment. It's not a perfect film, but I doubt something so raw and deeply felt ever could be. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

EVOLUTION

Arctic Monkeys say Humbug to recycling their homespun rock hype.

Arctic Monkeys play House of Blues on Dec.13.

Guy Aroch

ALEX TURNER'S MOTHER is a linguist. "Maybe I inherited that bit of fascination with words," the 23-year-old frontman of Arctic Monkeys says. "Just this morning, [my mother and I] were discussing the German word for wizard."

Turner earned his own reputation as a boy wizard with the Monkeys' 2006 CD Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not. Not only was it the fastest-selling debut in British history, but the rock magazine New Musical Express ranked it as one of the five greatest British albums of all time.

At the heart of the disc were singer/guitarist Turner's smart, unflinching lyrics about small-town English youth culture. But he and his teenaged Sheffield schoolmates drove it all home with a jarring post-punk cocktail that constantly shifted with snatches of ska, funk and metal.

Despite the massive hype, fueled by Internet-spread demos before the band even scored a record deal, Arctic Monkeys kept their heads down and refused to sit still. The group toughened the guitars and tempo for 2007's Favourite Worst Nightmare, and broadened the palette on Humbug, a new CD that slows both Turner's accented drawl and Matt Helder's kinetic drums in the service of accessible rock brooding.

"Bands that form when they're even a couple of years older, they've formed their tastes a bit more," Turner says. "With us, it was like, 'We're going to be in this band, and it's something to do on a Tuesday night, so we can play in the pub with our mates' band.' And it's always gone on one thing at a time, forming ideas and what you're into."

Early on, Arctic Monkeys were into British staples like Oasis and the Coral. But Turner says that guitar foil Jamie Cook also blasted Queens of the Stone Age albums in his bedroom. So the Monkeys jumped at the chance to have Queens (and now Them Crooked Vultures) frontman Josh Homme produce most of Humbug in his Mojave Desert studio digs.

By that point, band members' listening habits were turning to Jimi Hendrix, Cream and Nick Cave, whose spooky "Red Right Hand" the Monkeys revved into a droning stomp at the Paradise in August. So Homme channeled the group's growing affinity for darker guitar textures and even bluesy solos.

"We always had a little bit of fear about doing solos, and Josh certainly helped us douse that fear," Turner says from a U.K. tour stop in Newcastle. "There was always the part of the song where we would do [solos] quite quickly... to just not make it sorta embarrassing."

As a vocalist, Turner has also moved from rapid-fire bark to a heavier croon, carried over from the Last Shadow Puppets, his side project with Humbug coproducer James Ford. "It almost gave me the urge to be a good singer," says Turner, who was influenced by British rapper Roots Manuva and punk-poet John Cooper Clarke as well as Morrissey of the Smiths.

"We were never thinking about a rap-rock thing, because that's always a bit whiffy," says Turner, noting he was largely a fan of Roots Manuva's storytelling angles on "meticulous, everyday stuff."

That type of approach translates to Turner's wry wordplay on Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not, where he shared keen observations like "All the weekend rock stars are in the toilet practicing their lines" and "There's only music so that there's new ringtones."

"When they were written, I wasn't certain that they were even going to be on a record," he says. "It was more like these punch lines that would make our friends laugh.

"Once I got into that and started to realize they'd be a record, I thought, 'Why not make it kind of specific and tie it up in a neat little bow?'" says Turner, who delves more into impressionistic tales of temptresses on Humbug.

He also tackled the CD without a notebook of lyrics that he'd lost, forcing him to reconstruct or replace songs he'd planned. "Whatever stayed behind in that sieve in my head, those were the ones that counted," the singer says. "I was frantically trying to remember these ideas. Then it led me to new things, looking at it in a half-full way anyway."

Turner has made a similar adjustment since he listened to "I Am the Walrus" at age 12, upset he couldn't write lyrics like the Beatles. "I still can't write words like 'I Am the Walrus,'" he says. "But I'm not as frustrated about it." ✖✖✖

Phoenix Je T'aime

French Connection Swimming with vineyards, fine cheeses and eccentric filmmakers, France conjures up images of food and art. Not so much rock bands. Except for Phoenix, a group that earned its stand-alone reputation with a romantic synth-pop sound spanning up-tempo tracks to ballads. "Too Young," from the band's first album Untied, graced the Lost in Translation soundtrack, while 2009's Wolfgang Amadeus Phoenix elicited excited reviews and even won awards. On Dec. 4, Phoenix joins Passion Pit and Spoon at the Orpheum Theatre. You can leave your French phrase book at home, though. These guys croon in English.

Universal Thought

Over the Moon Artist Taro Shinoda was so moved by the moonlight in the courtyard at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, he created his own exhibit entitled Lunar Reflection Transmission Technique. With a self-constructed telescope attached to a camera, he filmed the moon from Boston, Tokyo, Istanbul and Limerick, a reminder that we all coexist under the same night's sky. He also did drawings like the one above. Shinoda's artwork and video installations are on display at the museum through January.

IMPROPER Sightings!

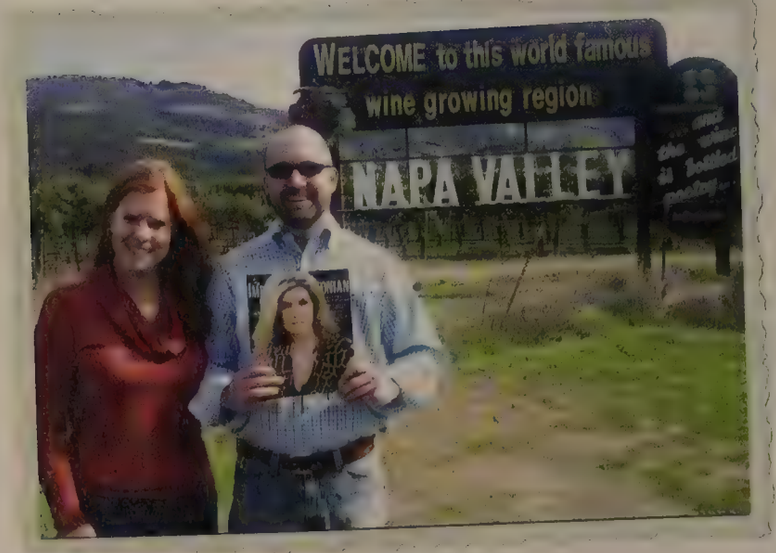
ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER BUMPING INTO A WALL AT THE WHIRLING DERVISHES FESTIVAL, HELD DEC. 10–17 IN KONYA, TURKEY



Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

David Luu visited Sydney, Australia for the National Rugby League final between the Melbourne Storm and the Parramatta Eels. Slippery customers, those Eels, but Storm players are all blowhards.

On a trip to the Elaphite Islands in Croatia, Michelle Jamnongjit and Julie Amos are very happy to see us. Or maybe that's just a canoe in their pocket.

We found this snapshot of Laura Menge and Jeff Shamp in Napa, Calif., a little earthy with a tannic kick. But it gave us a killer headache in the morning.

Ambassador Philip Parham from the UK's mission to the United Nations poses with our Fall Dining issue, which had to be translated into 160 languages for the occasion.

BOOK 'EM

Pink's Your Color

"Free to All" may be carved over the doors of the Boston Public Library, but a handful of civic-minded types pay a considerable amount of money to be sure it stays that way, like the ones who attended the BPL Foundation's Evening to Celebrate gala.

Cocktails were served among the stacks in the new wing. Then some 300 guests ambled through the courtyard, up the marble, lion-flanked staircase and into the Bates Reading Room for dinner. This was accompanied by a bit too much bloviating, but followed by just enough dancing, not to mention the salutary effects of free-flowing booze. Noticeable amid the multitude: cochairs Dora and Michael Lewin, banking babe Dian Goodwin, real-estate titan Norman Leventhal, cardiologist-to-the-stars Larry Cohn and the lovely Roberta, Back Bay party pair Alec "the Little Drummer Boy" Stern and his stunning wife, Grayson Moore, her father, Tom, emcee Janet Wu, the ever-affable Tom Eberhardt, civic-minded hipsters David Grossman and Mary Jo Sisk (sporting a killer dress), fashionista Marina Kalb, flower child Andrea Halliday with rakish restaurateur Tom Bardy, First Lady Angela Menino and Hizzonah (making their first black-tie appearance since his reelection), and a woman who said, "I happen to know that the mayor only played nine holes of golf last year," to which a friend responded, "Should've been his campaign slogan."

Then there was the woman wearing a diamond necklace from Shreve that she bought with the proceeds from wedding gifts she returned, and another who said, "I'm not sure he ever asked me to, but I don't think I ever slept with him... unless it was for coke."

All in all, a highly edifying evening, even if I did forget my reading glasses at home. In fact, the only major mishap was when a waiter dropped an entree onto one woman's Alexander McQueen dress. But if it's any consolation, she wore the salmon well.

Better Living Through Chemistry

Pop Quiz: Take It to the Max is: A) a sneaker brand slogan; B) the title of a porn movie starring someone whose given name is probably not Max;or, C) a fundraiser for the Max Warburg Courage Curriculum, held at the EpiCenter in South Boston. If you said C, you're correct, and if you were there, you're probably one of the young and the guest list. The party, which is somewhere between an Ivy League mixer and Viagra Night at the Playboy mansion, attracted such junior movers and shakers as Fred Warburg (after whose brother the charity is named), Pied Piper Parker Treacy, pre-facelift socialites Julia Owens, Samantha Strauss, Joanna Humphrey and Julie-Hume Gordon, her gifted other half, Phil, preppy pixie Meghan Fitzgerald with charming cheesemonger Brad Wasik, the exquisite Emily Gordon, brunette bombshell Charlotte Lewis and one girl in an off-the-shoulder Diane von Furstenberg number who got wine spilled all over her for the second year in a row, but at least this time it was white. (Memo to her: Perhaps you should've taken a cue from the girl who brought along a costume change, emerging from the ladies room in a sequined mini-dress and loudly asking, "Who wants a ride on my disco stick?")

Alec Stern, his wife, Grayson Moore, and her father, Tom, at the BPL

Andrea Halliday and Marina Kalb at the BPL

Janet Wu at the BPL

Samantha Strauss and Julie-Hume Gordon at Take It to the Max

Emily Gordon and Charlotte Lewis at Take It to the Max

Bill and Ali Achtmeyer at the International Fine Art Show

Given the thumping bass and rowdy crowd, it was deafness, alcohol or narcolepsy that allowed what was presumably somebody's dad to snooze in the corner, head tilted back and mouth agape. Even funnier, though, was the girl who said, "I don't watch what I eat or go to the gym. I keep this body with 20 milligrams of Adderall a day."

Boston's Finest

Anyone in the market for a John Singer Sargent portrait or a luminist seascape (a steal at $400,000) should've been at the Cyclorama for the preview party of the 13th annual International Fine Art Show. There were Warhols and Wyeths, Lautrecs and Lichtensteins, Audobon prints and antique maps, not to mention a lot of scintillating people to schmooze with.

The event, which raised money for the Handel and Haydn Society, attracted the likes of tireless supporters Debbie and Bob First, über–art-collectors Barbara and Ted Alfond, eminence grise Sherif Nada and the lovely Mary, party stalwarts Natalie Gardiner and John Hambrecht, the super-fabulous Joan Jolley, lovable shutterbug Cheryl Richards, and so on and so forth.

The luckiest man in the room: the guy who arrived and showed the cop out front where he was parked (illegally). "Don't worry about it," the officer said. "I'll just put a blank ticket on your windshield, and you're all set."

Which begs the question: Where do I sign up? ×××

Baby, It's Cold Outside

I just endured my first day-care commute in a snowstorm. Walking there entailed a baby carrier, two coats, a vest, booties, an umbrella and other assorted gear. Of course, I'm not alone in this ordeal. Andrew Rimas does a double drop with his girls. And when he gets to work, we'll waste 10 minutes swapping war stories. Like the Yankees and the T, the weather bands Bostonians together.

The upside to our shared suffering is the devotion people feel toward the city—even after they've left for, say, Los Angeles, and become a celebrity. Take our cover guy, Jay Leno, who grew up in Andover and attended Emerson College. Jay's just a little busy with his new show on NBC, but he still found time to trade jokes with Jonathan Soroff this month. The funnymen last talked in the early '00s.

Speaking of 10 years gone, Ezra Dyer reflects on the past decade through the lens of The Improper. Conveniently, Ezra's been writing his column since 1999, and he's as amusing as ever. A lot has actually stayed the same in these parts. Jay's still on TV, Tom Menino's the mayor, and winter's unbearable. Cue Andrew. "We sat in traffic for 45 minutes because they didn't salt the road," he says, entering my office. Gotta love Boston.

Happy New Year!

Wine-Wine Situation

SHELF LIFE

TRYING TO RECREATE THE bustling atmosphere of wine shops in Venice, the two married couples who own Central Bottle knew exactly where to open. "Central Square is the most European of all the squares in the Boston [area]," says Nick Zappia, owner of the Blue Room and co-owner of Central Bottle. "It has the most international feel." In a loft-like space designed by co-owner/architect David Rubino, customers are encouraged to linger over their cicchetti (Venetian tapas) and wine (sold by the glass on Thursdays). Adding to the community appeal are collaborations with local chefs, like Craigie on Main's Tony Maws, and skyping sessions with vintners. The tapas might be Venetian, but the shop's 300 wines come from all around the world—reflecting its diverse clientele. LINH TRAN BRINCAT

PATAK'S Original
AN AUTHENTIC INDIAN RECIPE

MAKE TIKKA MASALA AT HOME

INGREDIENTS

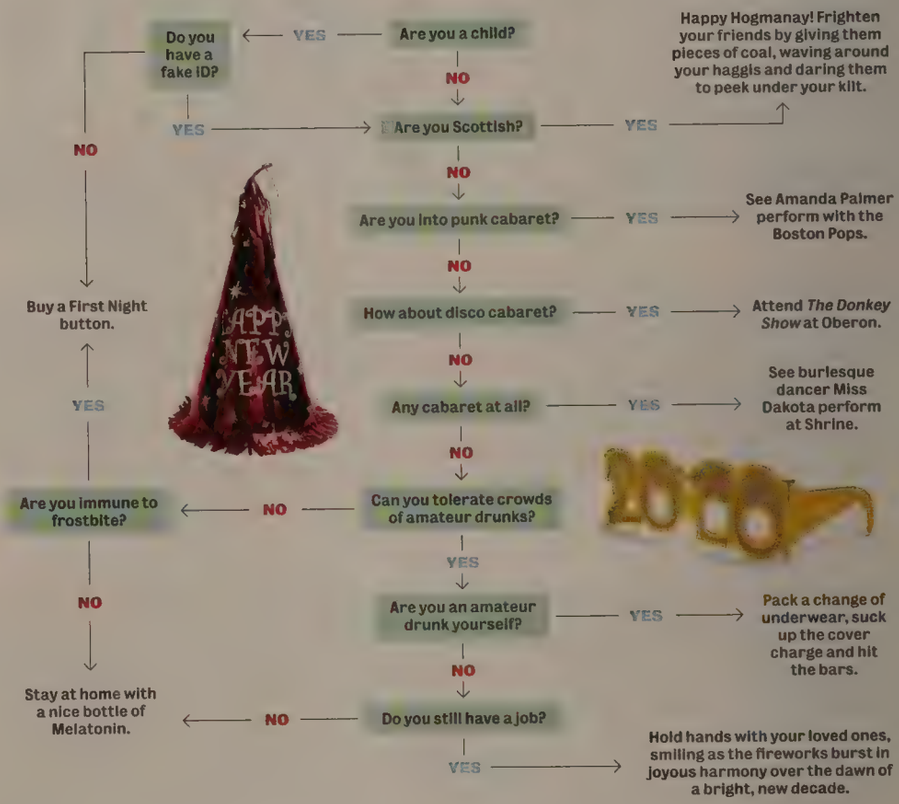
1½ pounds boneless skinless chicken (breast, thigh or mix of the two)
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 bottle (15 ounces) Patak's® Tikka Masala Curry Cooking Sauce
2 tablespoons finely chopped cilantro (optional for garnish)

PREPARATION

Dice chicken into ¾ inch pieces. Set aside

Heat oil in a heavy skillet over medium-high heat. Add chicken and sauté until chicken turns white, about 5 to 7 minutes.

Stir in the cooking sauce and bring to boil. Reduce heat and cover. Simmer for about 10 minutes; stirring occasionally.



Transfer to a serving dish. Garnish with cilantro. Serve over rice and/or with warm Indian Naan bread.

Good Eats

Chile Out

Angela Atenco Lopez smiles and gently corrects her son, Luís Garcia, in Spanish as he rattles off the long list of ingredients for her chile en nogada and forgets one. "Oh, yes, and chopped tomatoes," he translates apologetically. The seasonal special features a batter-fried poblano stuffed with a picadillo and dressed in a creamy walnut sauce. As with her beloved mole with its 100-plus spices, Lopez's chile is more harmonized orchestra than one-note flavor—save for the juicy pop of the pomegranate seeds.

Drink of the Moment

King of the Apes

On the Lord Hobo drink menu, you'll find cocktails like the Rambler, which pays tribute to the restaurant's vagabond intimations, and the Angelina, named for a woman who has a thing for drifters. And toward the end, you'll see four drinks that remind you that this is as much a beer bar as it is a place for a crafted cocktail. "There's this whole new ingredient, which is this variety of beer," bar manager Kevin Scott enthuses. "It's a whole new palette of colors that we can use."

After hovering around the myriad taps like a jonesing hummingbird, Scott finds the perfect Belgian tripel for the MONKEY BUSINESS ($10), one of Lord Hobo's beer cocktails. Made from brandy, velvet falernum, orange bitters and weisse beer, the drink is based on an old tropical cocktail that used cloves and banana puree. "In the traditional Belgian-style beers, the yeast has a banana and clove flavor to it, so I wanted to make a complement," he explains. "And we wanted to have something more than a shot and Bud." The result is a Dark 'n' Stormy for fairer weather—a drink that's more beach bum than train hopper.

"Look for character. It's all about the character, that's why people want vintage clothes.... The other part is quality.... Vintage designers were associated with the quality of their clothes, from hand-sewing, to proper zippers—it was an art.... You can check the seams and zippers and look at the 'made in' labels. You want to see USA, France, Italy and maybe Hong Kong. You can also go by the material. Polyester isn't bad if it's from the '60s or '70s when it was 350-thread count, not [the] 35-thread count of today. And if you're looking for wool, gabardine is the best; it's sewn three-times stronger than today's common wool. Vintage clothes have more life, more color, where so much of today's stuff is boring."

Well-Preserved

Seems like you can't pick up a menu these days without spotting charcuterie. Garden at the Cellar's Will Gilson explains that restaurants don't like to waste food, so finding a "creative, cost-effective, delicious way" to use trash-bound scraps is a plus. "After we make a batch of mousse or pâté, you can look into the kitchen and see all the cooks huddled around the finished product with toasted brioche and pairing knives in hand." Create the same scene at home with Gilson's recipe.

ELIZABETH BOMZE

DUCK-LIVER MOUSSE

Makes 6 small mason jars—and great gifts

NOTE: Duck livers and fat are available at specialty markets and butchers like Savenor's; the fat keeps well in the refrigerator and the freezer.

INGREDIENTS:
1 pound duck livers, cleaned
2 large shallots, chopped
1 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon finely ground pepper
1 tablespoon pâté spice (recipe follows)
1 ounce Pedro Ximénez sherry
3 cups heavy cream
Duck fat

GILSON'S PÂTÉ SPICE:
3 tablespoons finely ground black pepper
1 tablespoon ground ginger
2 tablespoons ras el hanout
2 tablespoons baharat
1 tablespoon za'atar

DIRECTIONS:
Put livers, shallots, spices and sherry in food processor and puree. With machine running, add heavy cream. Strain through fine-mesh sieve into heavy-bottomed casserole or glass dish. Bake in water bath at 325–350 degrees until thermometer inserted into center registers 155 degrees and mousse feels firm to touch, about 30–40 minutes. Then puree again to make smooth. Pour hot mixture into mason jars and cover with thin layer of duck fat once cooled.

Going Out

WHAT'S OLD IS NEW

The last batch of 2009 openings brought a wave of neighborhood joints, casual eateries and contemporary taprooms. Billed as a modern tavern, Woodward in the Ames hotel separates itself with a spare, Victorian aesthetic and installations dubbed the "Cabinets of Curiosity," which display an offbeat mix of oddities like measures, busts and a chipmunk in a kidney basin. The design sensibility, explains food and beverage director Uzay Tumer, is "Ben Franklin meets a supermodel."

If the story about how he invented bifocals didn't woo her, Franklin could turn to the cuisine from executive chef Mark Goldberg. Taking the concept of shareable plates to the level of a two-patty burger with a perforated bun ($15), Goldberg presents polished comfort food like a fried-clam roll with celery root and apple slaw ($14) and a version of Yankee pot roast made with short rib ($26). And exemplary of another 2009 food trend, Goldberg says, "We spent a long time pickling pretty much anything that grows."

WOODWARD
1 Court St., Boston
(617-979-8200)
woodwardatames.com

So you'll find pickled garlic and preserved lemon with your mussels ($13) and perhaps a pickled cherry in your Manhattan. The formidable bar program, led by "English Bill" Codman fresh from L'Espalier, offers classics and new creations, and the likes of the Pixies and Wes Welker have stopped by. (Though Welker would probably show up at your kegger if you asked him to.) "There's no dress code," Tumer says. "The cooler, the funkier, the edgier you are, the more welcome you are." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Wine

A Smart Alternative

It's bubbly time again and, for many of you, that means stocking up on your favorite Champagne. There's only one catch: Have you checked the prices of Champagne lately? Can somebody please tell these people that unemployment is still above 10 percent? Fortunately, you can find sparkling-wine alternatives that provide the same lift at a fraction of the cost. Hey, it's easy to go out and splurge on a bottle of Veuve, but what does that really say except that you can afford it? These winners, on the other hand, will please your palate and make you feel smart.

Master of Wine Sandy Block is vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

Adriano Adami "Garbel" Prosecco, NV ($15, BLANCHARDS, ALLSTON). Proseccos are all over the map stylistically, ranging from slightly sweet and dull, with simple candied fruit, to really fine and elegant, like this one. Quality has a lot to do with the origin of the grapes. These are from a combination of vineyards in Valdobiaddene and Conegliano, two of the Veneto's top prosecco zones. The wine has a light, fresh, delicate profile, a lacy, mild texture and smooth but firm flavors that finish with a touch of almond. Try it with brunch foods.

Domaine Carneros by Taittinger, Brut, 2005 ($30, WINE EMPORIUM, BOSTON). I'm not a raving fan of California sparklers in general, but this one I love. It's classically proportioned, sleek and mild but persistent in flavor, building in strength as the wine evolves on your palate. That length and the elegant bubbles provide the full "wow" experience. The House of Taittinger is known for infusing their cuvées with purity and precision, and their California expression is no exception. If that style appeals to you, this is a bona-fide steal. Pair it with shrimp salad.

Simonnet-Febvre Cremant de Bourgogne, Brut NV ($18, WINESTONE, CHESTNUT HILL). This has all the understatement and creamy elegance of true Champagne. Most people will think it's the real thing. Produced according to the traditional method from grapes grown in the area around Chablis in northern Burgundy, this sparkler is bone dry, with fine minerality and a soft, yeasty aroma. It's lovely, complex and superb with raw shellfish or fried fish.

TRAIN DRECK

TO THE GENTLEMAN WHO TAKES THE 7:18 AM COMMUTER TRAIN FROM LOWELL:

Not everyone on the train needs to hear your conversation the entire ride to North Station. I find it extremely rude that your conversations get heated every day. Consider driving into work or sitting in the back of the train. Or hang up the phone and conduct your business from work like everyone else!

Annoyed passenger

To line-jumpers at boats:

I just had to comment after seeing the explanation of your behavior in this column. I can't excuse the behavior of the person who interacted with you, but I can assure you that there were many other people just as annoyed as he was, yet too polite to say anything. You say that there are plenty of seats on the boat, but I doubt you would line-jump at a fast-food joint, in spite of the fact that there's more than enough food to go around. As for your friends, if whatever you need to talk about is so important, I suggest that they employ the radical concept of moving back in line to where you're standing. I can assure you that there would be no complaints.

Anonymous

To "Concerned Animal Lover" who wouldn't do anything for the dog chained in freezing, blustery weather:

You are a disgrace. A "concerned" animal lover would've gone into the restaurant and asked, "Who is the owner of...?" Once the person identified him/herself (trust me, they would), you could've walked up to him/her and discreetly shared your concern. If the bastard/bitch gave you attitude, then you could've firmly said: "You give me no choice but to speak up for your dog and call the proper authorities." And done it. Shame on your spineless self. Our furry friends have no voice. Don't go around saying you are an "animal lover." Coward. I just wish I'd been there.

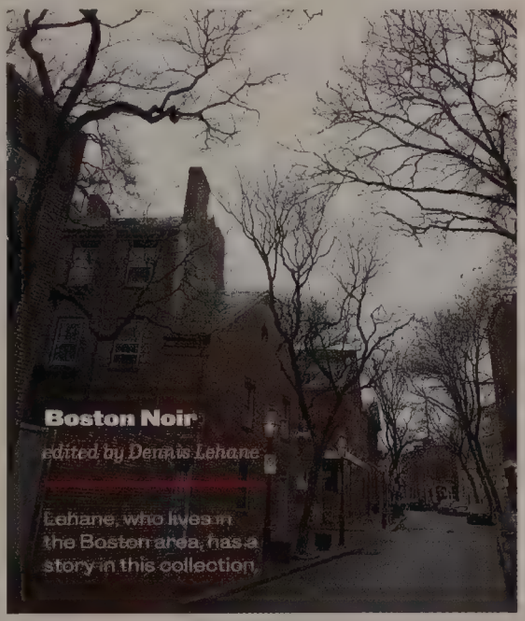
Mopsy { MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY }



IN THESE DARK TIMES

An anthology of crime fiction

"IN SHAKESPEARE, tragic heroes fall from mountaintops; in noir, they fall from curbs," editor Dennis Lehane explains in his introduction to Boston Noir, a collection of short stories. The tales take place in local towns—Brookline, Roxbury, Dorchester—coloring their immediacy in a smoky sort of way. And though full of working-class despair, they tend to display some small, tormented twist of sympathy.

Bob, in Lehane's own story, finds an abandoned dog in a barrel. Neighbor Nadia helps Bob care for his new pet until the real owner, weirdo Eric Deeds, comes along, demanding $10,000. Bob steals the dough from his bar-owning boss, Marv. Meanwhile, Eric and Nadia turn out to be troubled, old friends, her scarred face probably his handiwork. Their dog-desiring rivalry ends with murder.

The Financial District tale by Lynne Heitman delivers corporate terror: Sloan, a woman passed over for a big promotion at a downtown firm, kills her boss. She also keeps otherwise-overprivileged colleague Cornelius Beckwith Nash III deliciously gagged and bound as a cop tries to talk her out of shooting him. Sloan slightly redeems her humanity by being forced to put down her beloved horse Rowan.

John Dufresne's Southie story about an abusing priest has great emotional depth, casting a broad and tragic searchlight on Father Tom's inner life. His sad childhood, and later mistreatment of children, blend and blur into a dreamy confusion, part-faith, part-self-hatred, part-denial. ×××

TWO OF A KIND

Parish opens in the South End.

IF YOU LIKE THE PARISH CAFE on Boylston Street, you'll also like the recently opened Parish Cafe II in the South End. That's because the new outpost, located at 493 Mass. Ave., features "the same concept" and "the exact same food menu, at least to begin with," according to Justin Dalton-Ameen, assistant general manager at the original Parish.

You'll see the same chef-created sandwiches, the same "big beer list" and a "similar wine list," he adds. There's just one exception: Parish II doesn't have a full liquor license—not yet, anyway—just a cocktail menu with cordials.

FOR A LARGE-SCALE OPERATION, TURNER Fisheries in the Westin Copley Place Hotel is making a significant commitment to sustainable seafood. It's one thing to feature carefully hooked haddock, but the menu also has relatively esoteric selections, such as Laughing Bird shrimp—raised in inland ponds in Belize without pesticides or antibiotics—and Loch Duart Scottish salmon—raised in low-volume, eco-friendly ocean pens. The salmon has earned the imprimatur of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. All this means less wear and tear on the planet, but what about that pesky carbon footprint made by shipping the stuff?

CHARLES KELSEY HAS GREAT CREDENTIALS for any ambitious, food-related undertaking: CIA graduate, former editor at Cook's Illustrated and writer for the late Gourmet magazine. What he's chosen for his new project, however, couldn't be more down-to-earth or accessible. Kelsey plans to open a Brookline Village cafe called Cutty's, where he'll serve breakfast and lunch, with a focus on sandwiches. Kelsey says his sandwiches will range from $6–$8. Look for a January opening.

STAMP OF APPROVAL

Post 390 boasts a winning combination.

SPECIAL DELIVERY Crab-and-spinach dip makes a shareable starter at the downstairs bar.

A NEW RESTAURANT CAN succeed in the current economic climate, but it needs a team that mixes confidence with competence, experience in the kitchen and the dining room, and a commitment to offering diners value for their hard-earned dollars. Restaurateur Kenneth Himmel and executive chef Eric Brennan have marshaled these attributes at Post 390, primely located where the Back Bay and the South End meet. From everything I saw over three visits, they have a winner.

Post 390's two-story interior, crafted by noted restaurant designer Peter Nimitz, combines heat from three gas fireplaces with the warm colors and inviting ambiance at a 25-seat downstairs bar, where flat-screen TVs project the game du jour. Upstairs, one of three dining areas overlooks an open kitchen. Another affords Back Bay views from expansive windows.

The wait can be long, but there's plenty to pass the time. An array of draft beers competes with an excellent selection of wines, including 15 by the glass. New Harbor 2008 sauvignon blanc ($8), from Marlborough, New Zealand, showed the characteristic balance of fruitiness and refreshing acidity. In contrast, Tilia 2008 malbec ($7), from Argentina's Mendoza province, struck me as flabby and ponderous. A far better red was the 2006 Tenimenti Angelini Tuttobene ($28) from Tuscany, which delivered fruitiness, good structure and a fine bouquet.

The menu offers a satisfying range of affordable eats, as well. Savory and delicate, crab-and-spinach dip ($8) paired nicely with pita chips, while point Judith calamari ($10) brought a mountain of squid ringlets and tentacles, the latter crispy, but the ringlets too thick, a little tough and soggy. A bowl of full-bodied chowder ($8) arrived appropriately hot and chock-full of chopped clams and al dente potatoes. The bountiful Caesar salad ($8), with its piquant, mustardy vinaigrette, also succeeded. Great for sharing, white clam flatbread ($13) featured roasted red, yellow and green peppers, al dente broccolini, flavorful chopped clams and a dusting of Parmesan. An oval of crispy crust provided the perfect platform for this delicious topping. The burger, a hand-formed, half-pound of lean, juicy beef, was yet another winner.

Charles' Picks

Golden-brown skin and tender, tasty meat distinguished the roasted lemon-garlic chicken ($19.50), served au jus and enlivened with candied-lemon zest. The garlicky spinach made a nice accompaniment, but the grilled asparagus was disappointing—which served me right for ordering this spring vegetable at the end of November. Three huge sea scallops ($22.50) delivered sweet, nutty flavor and satiny texture enhanced by salty, smoky bacon. The bed of white beans, bell pepper and corn kernels in a cream sauce reinvented the succotash that we loved to hate in the grade-school cafeteria. Finally, among the main courses, two thick Colorado T-bone lamb chops ($33.50) satisfied my carnivorous urge with succulent texture and refined flavor, while the mint ratatouille garnish added a welcome Provençal flourish.

Following our waiter's enthusiastic endorsement of the banana cream pie ($6.50) for dessert, we enjoyed a heavenly confection that was sweet but not cloying. A tiny dessert with a small price, a sliver of dark chocolate cake ($3) provided an intense jolt for those who ascribe to the maxim "if it's not chocolate, it's not dessert."

Service at Post 390 did justice to the excellent food. From greeters to waiters, the staff demonstrated diligence, attentiveness and professionalism. Despite being busy, my water glass was never empty, and the ease with which I caught my waiter's eye to request another look at the wine list or the check was uncanny. Minor quibbles, like French fries clumsily piled helter-skelter on top of the burger ($15), didn't detract from my overall satisfaction. Against all odds, this big, ambitious restaurant seems on its way to success. ✖✖✖

OUR COWS ARE QUITE THE OUTDOORSWOMEN.

Cows love the outdoors. They don't really hunt or fish or anything, but they do enjoy a good roam around the countryside. So we give them plenty of room to do just that. It's called pasture-raised. Currently, 35% of the dairy we use comes from pasture-raised cows. Every day we're working to bring that number even higher. Because we respect cows. So much so that we never, ever, under any circumstances give our cows the synthetic hormone rBGH to stimulate milk production. When we need more milk, we go out and get more cows. It's that simple.

And when you come into our restaurants, you can feel good that all of our cheese and sour cream are 100% rBGH-free. Doing things this way isn't easy, but it's better for you, better for the cows, better for the farmers and better for the environment.

PHONE ENVY

Joining the smug masses

I FINALLY GOT AN IPHONE. AND I can't wait to tell you about it. Wait, hold on—I just got an e-mail I've gotta check. Oh, no way! OK, anyway, so my iPhone—sorry, just got a text… nothing important. So anyway, my new iPhone is a 3GS, which means it's got… man, I don't mean to be rude, but I've gotta take this call. Never mind. Dropped it.

Back to me. I resisted getting an iPhone for a few reasons. First of all, most of the people I know with iPhones are on their second or third one because the original died. They got ear grease on the touchscreen and it broke, or they tried to listen to non-Feist music and it broke, or they took off the protective case and it got sunburn and broke. The average iPhone lasts as long as the holiday cheer at Tiger Woods' house.

And when something made by Apple breaks, you end up standing in line at the Genius Bar in an Apple store, waiting for a guy with an ironic mustache to tell you to send it to Cupertino to be inspected by real geniuses. Then you spend three hours trying to find your way out of the store, because constant reliance on your iPhone's GPS has destroyed your innate sense of direction. Once outside, you idly wander around wondering how to decide what to eat without Urban Spoon, how to make fart noises without iFart, or how to pretend to be busy while drinking alone at a bar. You're like a newborn baby—a sad, uncool newborn baby who doesn't have an iPhone.

Another problem is that iPhone people are smug. And I'm one of them now. So if you see me concentrating on something on my iPhone, I'm probably designing my own geodesic hobbit loft with an architecture app that I read about in Cool Person Magazine, which I pirated off a server in Austin, Texas, while drinking free-trade guava juice in a coffee shop that's disguised as an old-school sneaker boutique. And what are you up to over there with your BlackBerry?

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

Probably reading an e-mail from your boss about which shades of Dockers are acceptable for Fiesta Fridays.

Of course, since I ditched my Razr, I'm now at the mercy of AT&T's service. But AT&T has better coverage than you think. Perhaps you've seen their TV ads with the less-bulbous–nosed Wilson brother. In one of these ads, he boasts that AT&T has coverage in Chicago. Whoa, AT&T, my phone will work in this place you call Chicago? Since you're bragging about that, I can only assume this is some obscure outpost of the Yukon wilderness accessible only by dogsled or nuclear icebreaker. Ditto for the other places you name: Denver, New York, Dallas, Phoenix and Atlanta. You don't mention Boston, presumably because it's obvious that a phone should work in a city with millions of people. As opposed to Newy Ork, which I might be pronouncing wrong, as I often do with foreign villages.

So the iPhone isn't very sturdy, it drops calls, it causes your attention span to atrophy and makes you look like an arrogant butthead. Also, once you encase it in the obligatory armor, it becomes the size of a codpiece, which is how I wear it. But for all that, I rely on my iPhone. I've only had it for a couple of months, and I've already used it as a flashlight, alarm clock, GPS, video game system, music library, boom box, still camera, movie camera, compass and even a telephone. One night at a restaurant with my wife, Heather, and her family, my plate included a comically phallic piece of gnocchi. So I used the camera to take a picture, then fired up the Juxtaposer photo-editing app to overlay Heather's sister's face onto it, much to the amusement of all. Once you have that kind of technology, there's no going back.

The part that worries me, however, is that I've taken another step toward the full Applization of my life. Apple runs my e-mail, my cell phone, my computer. Thanks to GPS, it knows where I go. Apple knows what music I like and which TV shows I watch. It has all my photos. Apple paints Microsoft as the scheming monolithic corporation that's out to run your life, but Microsoft isn't the one hawking a software package that's named "iLife."

Think about it: If the government said you had to carry around a GPS-enabled, demographics-scavenging minicomputer, there'd be riots. But when Apple makes you pay a few hundred bucks to do the same thing, you're cool. Oh, I feel a good rant coming on about all the conspiracy theorists who obliviously carry iPhones in their pock—oops, wait a sec, I've got a call coming in. Never mind. Dropped it. ×××

FAMILY MATTERS

First pour a stiff drink, and then let the relatives in the door.

"FAMILIES CAN BE KILLERS," says my friend Willy. He's a philosopher king who reads Horace in the original Greek and constantly quotes folks as diverse as Tolstoy and Dickens. As you're tempted to reach for the channel changer, here's a quote from each of these people that may intrigue you. "Happy families are all alike, every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way," Tolstoy writes in Anna Karenina. And, "Accidents will occur in the best regulated families," Charles Dickens observes in David Copperfield.

Willy goes on about families: "These days, I'm seeing more family distress than ever, and much of it's [due to] the new economic climate. This is a typical high-end scene: The grandfather became wealthy years ago, and the father had a job but didn't add to the family wealth. Indeed, he spent a lot of the inheritance but still lived the same lifestyle. The grandchildren arrive, and few of them have the incentive to work hard. They have low-end, low-pay jobs or, for various reasons, don't work at all.... The only thing they have left of real value is usually a vacation home. Well, three kids inherit it, and the two [broke ones] say to the third, who's doing pretty well in life, 'We don't have an interest in the house. We need the dough. Buy us out.' [Their sibling responds,] 'I'm not doing that well. Screw you.' So they sell the family homestead, sue each other and never speak again."

Willy is a cynic, of course. But I've witnessed many instances of exactly what he describes. I used to have a great solution to the biggest of family horror shows this time of year: holiday dinners. From the beginning of our marriage, my wife and I always hosted everything. We never trusted others to pull it together without armed combat. In those years, at Thanksgiving, we'd invite the relatives for about 1 pm. At noon, I'd pour two parts gin, one part vodka and a smidge of vermouth. I'd shake it with a holiday vengeance and ease the concoction into an old-fashioned glass. Bingo. I didn't care about relatives on a tear, or full of imagined slights, or on the dole, or generally pissed off at life.

Family businesses can have their own dysfunctional dynamics. My friend Paul's an expert on the matter. Paul worked in wallpaper with his father and was part of an organization with many members in family businesses. Ever see the great movie The Royal Tenenbaums? If every family is a soap opera, every family business brings new meaning to the term. Paul eventually sold the wallpaper company and realized his dream of teaching. He got his master's degree at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, entered the world reborn and initiated Northeastern's Center for Family Business. Now he's the principal of Transition Consulting Group, serving families, businesses and educational institutions. Looking around, I'd guess Paul will be working for the rest of his life. Here are some of his secrets for bringing harmony to difficult situations:

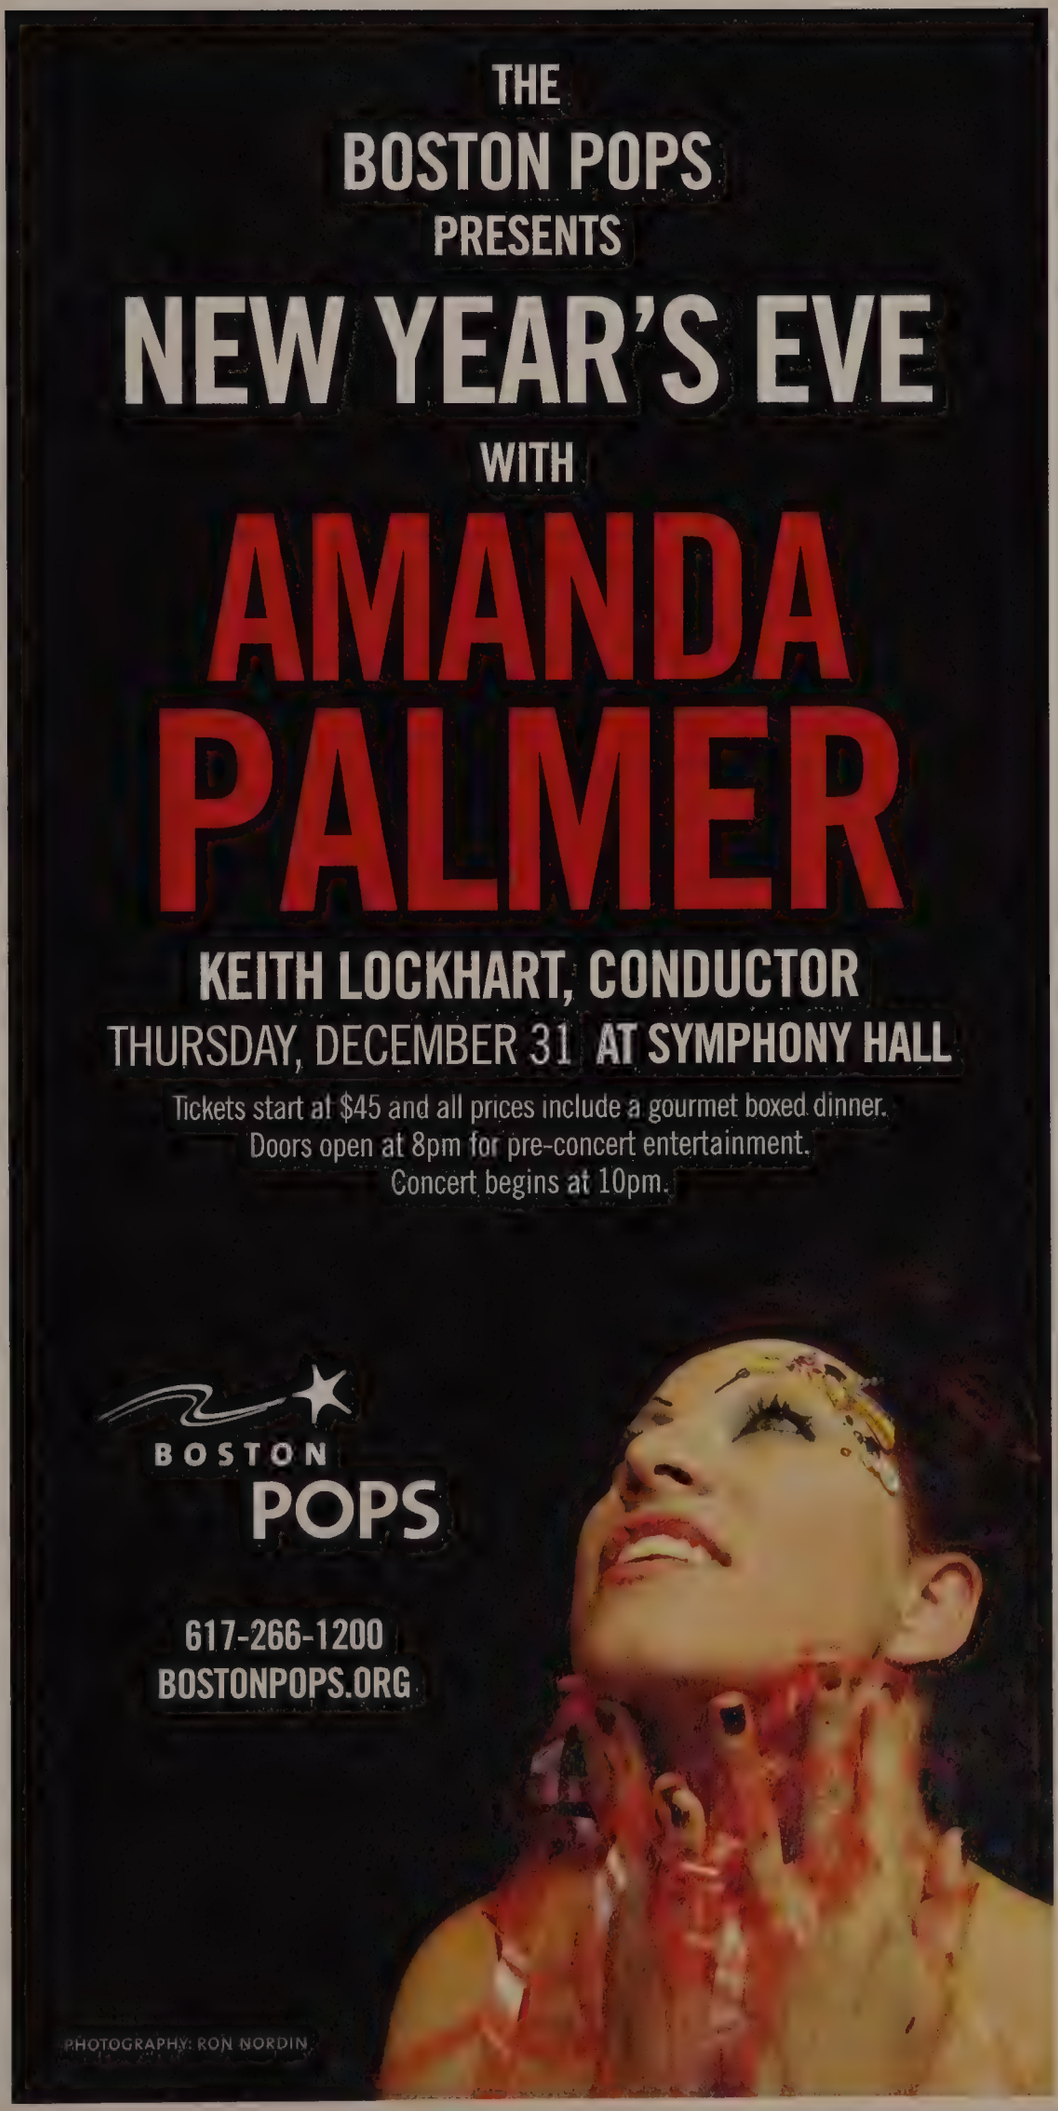
1.) "My surveys have told me that in 90 percent of dialogues, 90 percent of the energy of the listener goes into what their response is going to be. Almost nobody listens. You have two ears and only one mouth; pay attention to the proportions."

2.) "Tell family stories, personalize the past," Paul says. "Young people particularly relate to this, and seldom do they get to hear about family history. I remember the day our factory burned to the ground in Roxbury. I was a little boy. My uncle, who was also in the business, was running around pulling his hair out, hysterical. I was outside with my dad, watching the building implode. Dad was busy writing on a pad of paper attached to a clipboard.

'What are you doing, dad? Your whole business is blowing up!'



"He looked at me calmly. 'I'm planning for the future. Where will we move? Who's going to ship us new inventory? Today's Thursday. By Monday, we'll be back in business.'

"I've never forgotten that story. It still resonates as a life lesson."

3.) "Hold family meetings and be prepared to give others the benefit of the doubt. And try to anticipate what may happen. Like if Uncle Louie tells your nine-year-old about the birds and the bees. You've got to know how to react without killing Uncle Louie."

4.) "I advise playing golf or tennis, or going bowling with difficult relatives. The family that plays together, stays together. It's amazing what neutral territory and doing enjoyable things can produce for harmony."

5.) Lastly, Paul asserts, "Tell the truth. It's easier to remember." And he recalls one thing more. "Treat friends like family, and treat family like friends." He's a brilliant guy. But I think that families can still be killers. And like Willy, I'm noticing that in this economic climate, relationships are being challenged more than ever. So my bottom line, pulling some from Paul's advice, is, yup, telling family stories is fascinating and great therapy. But make sure, before any clan gatherings, to have a strong drink. ***

ON BRADY, TIGER, MARCO AND PERK

5 HOT STORYLINES

Growing Pains
In recent weeks, there's been an influx of people starting to question Tom Brady's commitment to football. They claim his focus isn't as intense, and that maybe winning isn't quite as important as it once was. And to that I say... of course, it isn't! In 2003, Brady had two priorities: winning Super Bowls and banging models. In 2009, he's like every other 32-year-old guy with a wife and two kids. His life changed, and so have his priorities.

The Rebirth of Perk
Despite KG's recent strides back toward greatness, the single biggest story of this Celtics season continues to be Kendrick Perkins' transformation into a legitimate force on the offensive end. At this point, I'm not even sure we're watching the same person; Perk's the C's most reliable low-post option! And anyone who predicted this is a much better liar than I am.

Marco? Scutaro!
Blehhhhhh. That's all I feel like saying about this Scutaro signing. Sure, he's a fine player, and yeah, maybe he'll add a little spunk to a painfully boring clubhouse.... But come on! Is this really going to be the highlight of the offseason? For the second straight winter, the Sox Hot Stove seems to be stuck on preheat. That is, unless you have a fetish for acquiring Ramon Ramirezes.

Out of the Woods
As I write, Tiger's mistress count is up to 11, and by the time you read this, it'll probably be 11,000. But the truth is, a year or so from now, nobody will care. As long as Tiger keeps winning, people will move on. His transgressions will become nothing more than a tired punch line. If you don't believe me, go ask Kobe (but bring some mace).

Tuukka Time A third of the way through the season, and here's one thing I know for sure. If the Bruins are ever going to fight back into the upper echelon of Boston's pro sports teams, it'll be on the back of Tuukka Rask. The 22-year-old's got it all—youth, talent, a high-profile position. Not to mention that "cool name" marketability that can transcend any level of anti-Bruins bias.

1 ONE WIN/WIN SITUATION

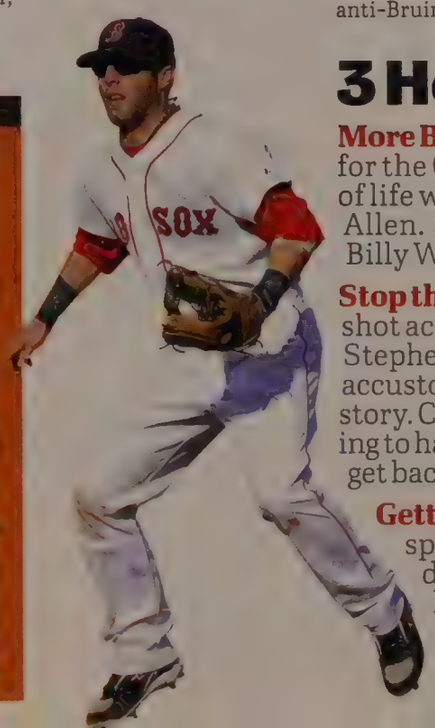
Dave Roberts seems like a great guy, which is why I was happy to see him land a sweet new job with the Padres. He was also the worst baseball announcer this side of an empty paper bag, which is why I was effing ecstatic to hear about his new job with the Padres! Good luck, Dave.

4 DATES TO WATCH

12/18 It's your last chance this season (maybe ever) to see Allen Iverson force bad shots and alienate teammates in a 76ers uniform. Come for the basketball. Stay for the memories.

12/20 The Patriots head to Buffalo in search of their first true road win of the season. Read that again, and go run a bath. I'll fetch the toaster.

12/25 The Celtics head down to Orlando, where all the Magic want for Christmas is for Stan Van Gundy to shut the hell up.



1/1 The Bruins and Flyers face off in the highly anticipated Winter Classic. Things haven't been this icy at Fenway since the day Linda Pizzuti Henry landed her new gig.

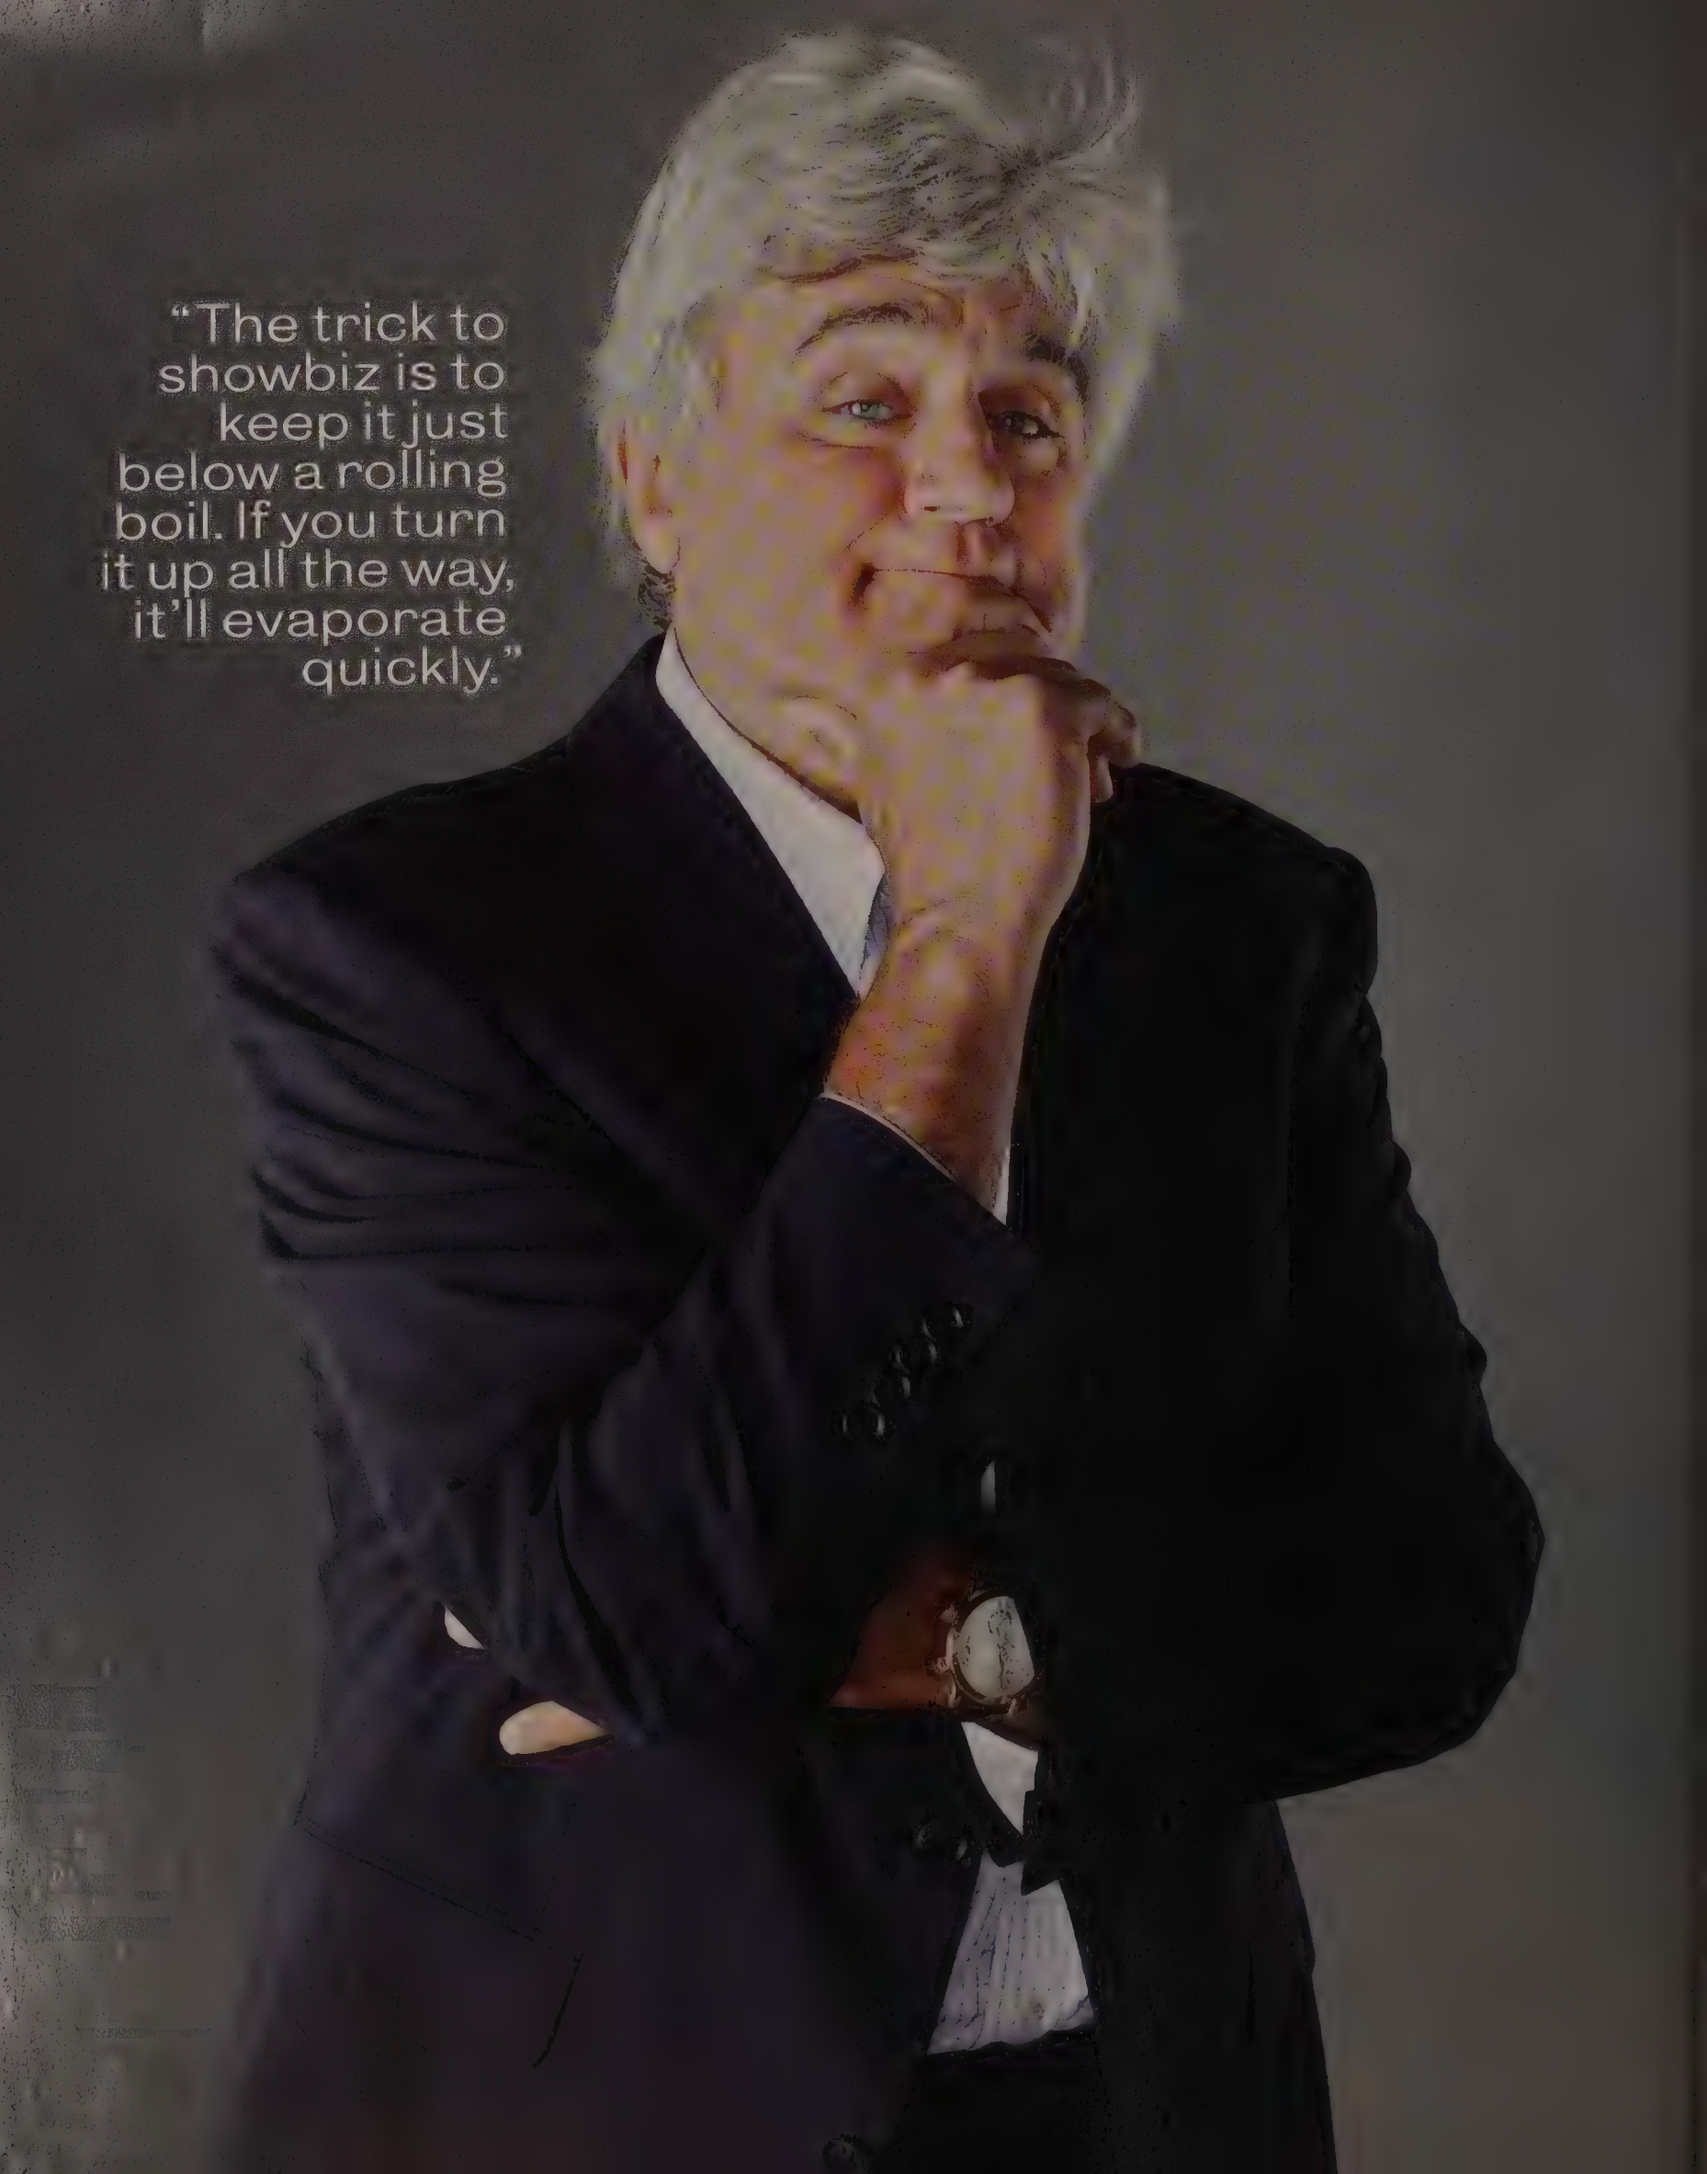
2 REASONS THE PATS ARE TOAST

Door No. 3 "And Brady fades back to pass.... He looks over to Moss... covered. Now he's looking at Welker... nothing. Uh oh... now he's on the move. Looking... looking... looking.... Hey, where are the rest of his receivers?!?!" And that's the question: Who's the third option here? Where else can Brady turn? Unfortunately, in Miami, that answer was Channing Crowder.

No Rush The Pats' secondary is a mess, but we knew that coming into the season. No, what's really killing them right now is their non-existent pass rush—a fact that makes Richard Seymour look a hell of a lot more valuable than a midround pick in the barren 2011 Draft.

3 Holiday Wishes



More Billy Please The loss of Marquis Daniels is a big one for the Celtics. But far more terrifying than the prospect of life without Quisy is the nightmare of life with Tony Allen. So here's my plea to Danny Ainge: Just bring back Billy Walker.

Stop the Insanity In a world where news can be instantly shot across the country with one simple tweet, blog or Stephen A. Smith scream, we've all grown just a little too accustomed to flying off the handle at the tiniest whiff of a story. Case and point: Pedroia's move to SS. It was never going to happen, and that day of commotion is one we'll never get back. Everyone needs to chill.

Getting Miggy I don't expect this to actually transpire—it would be far too frivolous given the hundreds of millions of dollars in the owners' pockets—but nothing would make me happier than to have Miguel Cabrera in Boston. I'd gladly put up with his Derek Lowe drinking habits in exchange for his Manny Ramirez production.

Soroff On JAY LENO

TV's feel-good guy on critics, underage supermodels and Jon Stewart

ICONIC TV HOST AND STAND-UP COMIC JAY LENO, 59, was raised in Andover and graduated from Emerson College. After reigning from the Mount Olympus of NBC's The Tonight Show and taking his current prime-time slot, Leno remains a giant in his field and needs little introduction. He lives in southern California with his wife, Mavis, and one of the country's largest car and motorcycle collections.

Jonathan Soroff: How many children do you think have been conceived while you talked on TV in the background?
Jay Leno: I've been told that the average time is 10:30 pm, so I might be more of an afterglow.

I think the entire staff of The Improper Bostonian was conceived that way.
That means either they were paying attention, or they weren't. I'm not quite sure which way to go on that one.

Any words for the critics who judged your new show after only a few episodes?
Don't believe the good stuff, don't believe the bad stuff. The real stuff is somewhere in the middle. I've always said this about show business: Don't fall in love with a hooker. Enjoy yourself, have a good time, but you can't take it too seriously.

Topic you'd never joke about?
One time, there was something like a nuclear accident, and I said to Kevin, "It's not so bad. Your kids might have two heads...." Next day, I get this call from a guy with a baby with two heads, conjoined twins. He was really upset. I said, "I promise you I will never mention a two-headed baby again." Five years go by. I have on Matt Damon and Greg Kinnear, who did this movie where they're conjoined twins, and they came onstage that way. Next day my phone rings, and it's the same guy, yelling, "You promised!"

Joke you regret?
Last night I did a joke about Jared the Subway guy gaining a few pounds. There were pictures of him online, and I said, "I don't know which is more pathetic: the fact that he's put on weight, or that I'm looking at him online." Then I get home, and I get this blast of: "Jared died today!" Of course, it was a hoax, but I felt just awful.

Anything your audience doesn't get?
You have to go with what your audience knows. Once you get past secretary of state, no one's ever heard of him, so I did jokes about Max Baucus and people are looking at me like I'm from another planet. So you say to yourself, "Do I win the battle or lose the war?" For every clever joke that's going to get quoted in the New York Times, you have to do five others. It's a fine balance. When you do this every day, you can't be the edgy, cool guy.

Especially with Middle America watching.
Exactly. Sam Kinison, hilarious comic, but one of his funniest bits ever was about necrophilia—screwin' dead people. He'd get screams, but I'd say to him, "Where do you go now?" The trick to showbiz is to keep it just below a rolling boil. If you turn it up all the way, it'll evaporate quickly.

Funniest comedian, dead or alive?
Richard Pryor. Besides the material, the essence of the man was funny.

Least favorite kind of guest?
When it's really awkward, like the 17-year-old supermodel. You're talking essentially to a child inside an incredible woman's body. Now what do I do? I can't flirt. Then I'm the creepy, middle-aged guy. I have nothing in common with her. It's an odd situation. And sometimes the reality TV people are strange.

How do you feel about reality TV?
If I want to watch regular people, I'll just go outside. Regular people are not that interesting.

Any guest ever intimidate you?
I had Ann Coulter on. So she comes out, and I realized pretty quickly she had brought her own cheering section. I tried to have a discussion with her, but everything became, "Well, Jay, liberals..." and her crowd would cheer, and I let the show get hijacked from me.

Is there anyone you'd never have back?
A lot of stars who are just too cool for the room. I mean, if you don't want to be here, don't come.

How do you keep guests on track?
If the guest goes into some political or religious rant, then I'm like, OK, lemme take a left turn here. I love Jesus, too, but that's not what the show's about. So I say, "What was your first car?"

Who'd win in a fistfight: Oprah or Ellen?
I think Oprah. She's probably got a sucker punch.

Is Dr. Phil a muppet?
Not sure what that means, but it's amazing that you can make a fortune just dealing in common sense. I was on a plane, and this guy left behind one of the big business books. It says things like, "Going into a job interview, be sure to wear a clean shirt and tie." Really? I realized that you don't get ahead because you're really smart. You get ahead because most people are really stupid.

Person from the past you'd most like as a guest?
I'm lucky 'cause I've met a lot of my idols, and it's not always a great thing. I was once opening up for [a famous folk band], so I knocked on the dressing-room door and said, "Hi, I'm Jay Leno. Your opening act." The guy goes, "Oh, OK. Got any coke?" I said no, and just slam. So meeting your heroes can be disappointing.

Biggest "get" of your career?
Obama. It was the first time a sitting president ever did a late-night talk show.

Any superstitions or rituals before going on-air?
I don't like hot liquids: coffee, tea, soup.... Soup is just a way of screwing you out of a meal. I'm sorry, we don't have anything to eat. Here's something wet in a bowl. I don't like my food touching other food. Keep the steak and the potato apart, please. Rituals? I tap the wall or touch something each time I come on, but it's so second-nature I don't even know I do it. I'm a creature of habit. I wake up at about 6:45 am, and I sleep 4-5 hours a night.

Is Jon Stewart the future of TV news?
He's terrific. Really funny. He goes over the heads of mainstream America. A lot of people don't have an education, or they don't follow the news, so they don't get it. He's not a guy you'd see onstage in Vegas. I tend to be good food at sensible prices. He's sort of a gourmet restaurant. I don't mean that in any negative way, about him or me.

Is Emerson College the best broadcast communications school in the country?
I'm sure it's a fine school. I didn't pay a lot of attention when I was there. At the time, they had no training for comedy, and I was working the Playboy Club across the street, making a thousand bucks a weekend in 1969/1970.

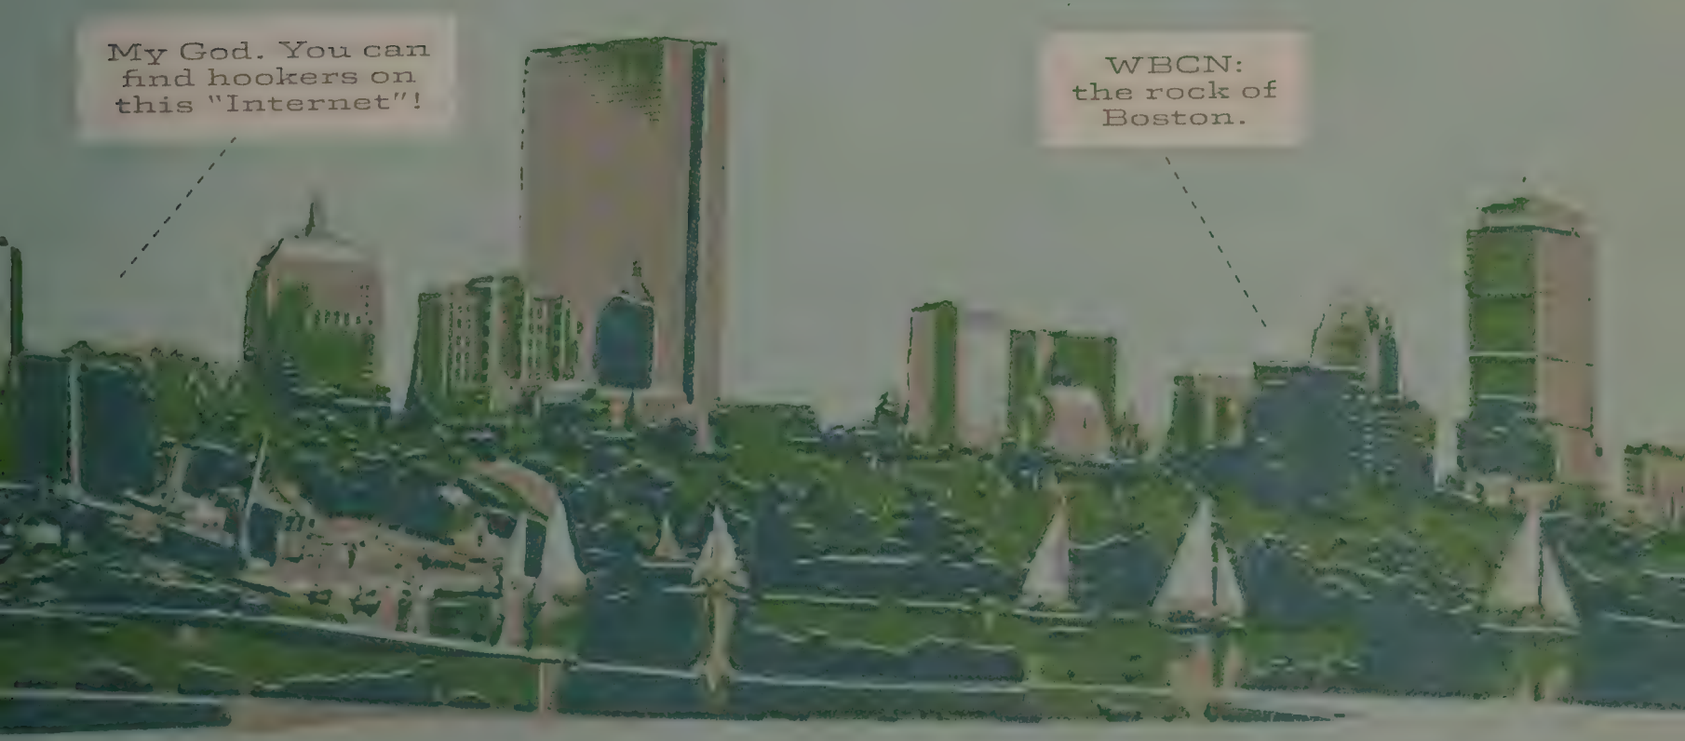
Worst gig ever as a stand-up?
A guy asked me to entertain at what I later found out was a whorehouse in a three-decker in Dorchester.

Can you believe you get paid to make jokes?
I'll still do a gig and almost wet myself laughing when they hand me the check. At this point, I'm playing with house money. If it ends tomorrow, great. The trick is to just enjoy it. ×××

TIME WARPED

FROM THE FALL OF THE RACK to the rise of wasabi peas, LOOKING BACK ON THE LAST DECADE

BY EZRA DYER



TYPICALLY, IT TAKES A FEW YEARS FOR THE GESTALT OF a decade to come into focus. The '70s scream disco ridiculousness. The '80s signify greed and cheesy, digital futurism. But the '90s remain a bit of an enigma. When we start throwing '90s parties, what are we gonna do? Wear flannel and listen to Alice in Chains while sullenly drinking coffee? That doesn't sound fun.

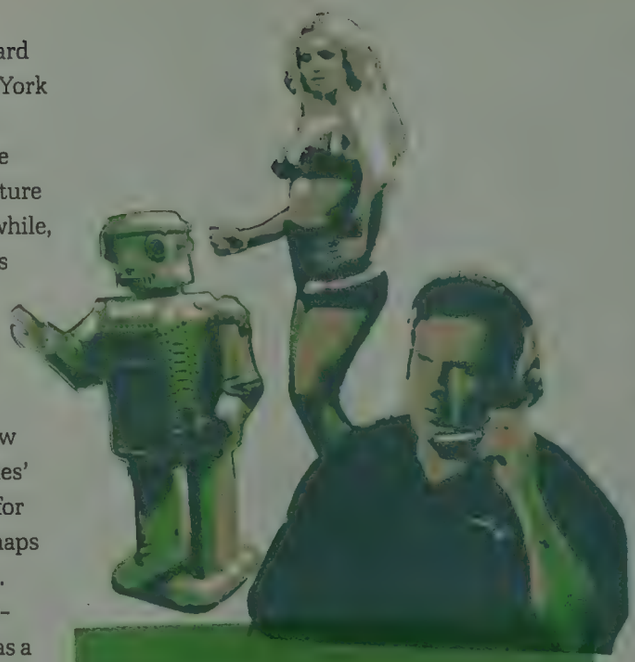
But the '00s, even though they're barely behind us, already have a strong identity. At an '00s party, you'll wear Crocs and listen to Britney Spears while bragging about your real estate investments. Maybe you'll have a Razr clipped to your belt. And revelers could play NHL 2001 on a 27-inch analog TV that takes up half the room.

As our nostalgia sets in, we decided to look back on the last decade through the lens of The Improper archives (focusing on the early years because, honestly, they're more amusing). Conveniently, I began writing for the magazine at the tail end of 1999, so I was there for the booms and the busts, the crushing losses and the huge wins, as Boston reinvented itself. Ten years ago, there was a giant, rusty highway bisecting the city, everyone figured Harvard knew how to manage its money, and these things called newspapers were profitable. It all seems kind of wild now, doesn't it?

Consider our city's sports teams circa 2000. The Red Sox were still three years away from the Grady Little incident, the Patriots played on a glorified high-school field, and the Celtics were coasting on memories of Bird, Parrish and McHale. The Bruins... well, the Bruins have stayed consistent. In 2001, we ran a story comparing Boston's sports teams with New York's. In a heated debate,

I denigrated the Big Apple while writer Richard Torres dismissed our city as a bunch of New York wannabes.



Of the Boston scene, I wrote that there were bright spots, but that "I haven't seen a big picture this depressing since The Green Mile." Meanwhile, Torres mocked a couple of losers by the names of Bob Kraft and Bill Belichick. "Just look at the Patriots," he wrote. "This is a team with an owner… who keeps employing Giants and Jets retreads.… Naturally, Kraft replaces [Pete Carroll] with another New York name: former Browns coach Bill 'Chuckles' Belichick.… A superb defensive coordinator for both the Giants and the Jets, Belichick is perhaps best known for being Jets-coach-for-a-day.… This sort of mercurial instability made him irresistible to Kraft." Characterizing Belichick as a retread seems especially hilarious as the rest of the league now clamors for the Patriots' scraps, but after that fourth-and-two against the Colts, we'll concede the "mercurial" thing.

We also covered a new musical telling the story of Babe Ruth's sale to the Yankees. Playwright David Kruh said, "There was always this worry in the back of my mind that if the Red Sox won, we wouldn't have a show. But all my friends reassured me: 'Relax, this is the Red Sox we're talking about.'" We tend to forget, in the blissful world of modern Boston fandom, that there once was a cottage industry built on our misery.

When we weren't fretting over our mediocre sports franchises, we were scheming ways to get rich on this Internet doodad. In January 2000, The Improper welcomed the new millennium by debuting a column called "Boston Internet." That's right, we actually had a column dedicated to educating you about the Web. In fact, there was an entire genre of articles devoted to informing readers about new sites—because how else would you learn about that sort of stuff? Searching the Web yourself was much too tedious, as you can infer from my story "Ditching the Dial-Up: High-speed Internet Access Is Great—If You Can Get It."

The Internet column, written by Geoffrey James, is a time capsule of our wild expectations and fears. In November 2000, James warned about the trend of prostitutes using the Web to meet clients—something I can't recall ever becoming relevant again. In our usual reserved manner, it was titled "Invasion of the Cyber-hookers." Also in that issue: We use the phrase "What's the dilly?"

I also covered the World Wild Web, detailing how you could stay home and accomplish everything you needed to do—online! I know, it hardly seems possible. Though I did turn you onto a movie-rental site called Netflix, which is probably the only site I mentioned that still exists. Actually, correction: I just checked, and IWantAMassage.com is still in business, too. I really know how to pick 'em.

TRULY, MY ROOMBA IS THE BENZ OF AUTONOMOUS VACUUMS AND THE ENVY OF ALL MY NEIGHBORS.

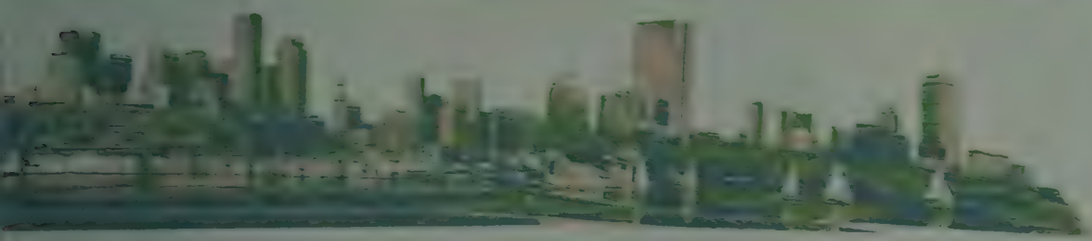
Not all of our prognostications were as sharp. I won't even get into the story, but one early-'00s summary in the table of contents reads, "Robots might well become the next big status symbols." Truly, my Roomba is the Benz of autonomous vacuums and the envy of all my neighbors.

In late 2001, James wrote a column offering tech predictions for 2002, including "The Xbox game machine will flop in the face of competition from the Sony PlayStation 2 and Nintendo GameCube." Right. We all have GameCubes, don't we? However, he also predicted that: "Handheld devices that can send and receive short e-mails will become the must-have items for hip executives and 20-somethings. Sales of 'smart phones,' which can handle both voice calls and e-mails, will take off." Presumably, James then invested in BlackBerry and now lives on his own private island off Barbados.



Speaking of hot, new gadgets, in 2000 I turned you on to a portable DVD player that you could take on a plane. Imagine: Your own movie theater with a seven-inch screen, right on your lap. And it only cost $1,300! You could get one at Tweeter, a store that has unfortunately gone the way of the $1,300 portable DVD player.

Tweeter isn't the only business that bounced during the past decade. The archives are like a graveyard of defunct enterprises. In a March 2001 issue, there's a photo of Carmen Electra at the Avaland anniversary party at Avalon. Now Avalon is the House of Blues, and Carmen Electra is a wizened crone. Anyone remember Polly Esther's, the Big Easy, Barcode, the B-Side Lounge or the Palace? In 2001, Pravda 116 owner Kevin Troy is quoted as saying, "Every weekend we've got 600 to 700 people lined up outside," hence the expansion into the Alley with La Boom. Then the Liquor Store replaced La Boom, suggesting that all that stood between the Boom and greatness was a mechanical bull. Pravda's 600-person line eventually dwindled enough to justify its restyling as Gypsy Bar.

I won't reminisce too much, but it's startling how many of my favorite venues are gone. I once wore a bathrobe to Emily's on Winter Street and met a future girlfriend at the grand opening of its counterpart, SW1. I hit Buzzy's Roast Beef (now the Liberty Hotel) for late-night sandwiches. I remember another night when I saw Dane Cook at the Comedy Connection in Faneuil Hall, and then went to Embassy to get my white-man dance on and use the phrase "Get my dance on." That would be a hard itinerary to replicate, now that the Comedy Connection moved to the Wilbur Theatre, Embassy went the way of Avalon, and Dane Cook plays to stadiums when he's not making horrible movies.

The Rack deserves special mention among former nightlife destinations. If you ever hung out there, you know the place was aptly named. Because, you know, there were lots of pool tables. At the Rack, I snuck into a background shot for Rachael Ray's Tasty Travels, saw Mario Cantone do a comedy routine on Osama bin Laden and showed up at the club's annual Halloween party dressed as a golfer getting struck by lightning—complete with charcoal smeared on my face. It took me a while to figure out why everyone was offended.

WE TEND TO FORGET, IN THE BLISSFUL WORLD OF MODERN BOSTON FANDOM, THAT THERE WAS ONCE A COTTAGE INDUSTRY BUILT ON OUR MISERY.

On the food front, in 2001 it was our pleasure to tell you about a wild, new bar snack: wasabi peas. "Be forewarned," we wrote, "wasabi, the spicy green mustard paste served with sushi, is no less powerful in 'pea' form." Tell me more about this mysterious wasabi. 2001 Improper!

We also held a pizza competition way back when, including an entry from a new shop on Charles Street called Upper Crust. They didn't win—actually, nobody did, which sort of calls into question our methodology—but we gave them an authenticity rating of "molto bene." Which apparently is authentic enough to warrant another 25 locations from here to Dubai.

As Upper Crust spread from Beacon Hill to the far-flung reaches of Earth, Boston itself gave rise to whole new neighborhoods. In March 2001, we ran a panoramic photo of the Fan Pier site. Between Anthony's Pier 4 and the Moakley Courthouse, there's nothing but a lone park bench. What's now the Seaport District was a blank slate—and one that's still being filled in.

Early-'00s Boston wasn't a big destination for conventions, because we had neither a state-of-the-art convention center nor enough fancy hotels to handle the influx if we did. Today, we've got the convention center, along with the Ritz, the InterCon, the Mandarin, the Liberty, the Renaissance and the Westin Waterfront—not to mention a slew of boutique hotels like the Onyx, Nine Zero, the W and Ames. Now visitors don't have to stay at the Chisholm Inn on Route 1 in Saugus, unless they want to.

Real estate has been on our minds throughout the past decade, mostly in the form of bemoaning its expense. Consider this quote: "Apartments that have been converted to condos start at $300,000 in Southie, and a 1,200-square-foot unit can cost $350,000." That sounds about right, if a bit high, for today, doesn't it? That article is from 2001. Southie condo owners, feel free to go punch a wall. The real estate bust hasn't hit all neighborhoods equally, however. That same year, we profiled a few sexy listings in different areas, including a renovated 2,700-square-foot, four-story, single-family home in the South End for $949,000. These days, that would get you a parking spot and a coupon for a cupcake.

When you stop to think about it, it's shocking how much Boston and the city's culture have changed in such a short period of time. In May 2001, we devoted a cover to a star in the new genre of programming known as reality TV, with a headline that read, "Can Richard Hatch Survive Boston?" (Better question: Can Richard Hatch survive prison?) A decade ago, you could sit in gridlock and peer into second-story windows in the Financial District while listening to WBCN and fantasizing about how cool it would be if they put seats on top of the Green Monster. Now you can have a gourmet culinary crawl in a formerly cracked-out part of the South End. In 2001, we informed you that developers were calling this area SoWa.

And yet, in some ways our narrative is on a loop, which is either frustrating or comforting. I find it reassuring that whatever troubles we face, we've been there before. Ponder this excerpt from a story about the challenges facing Boston restaurant owners: "Leaner times are upon us. The gravy train that delivered hordes of free-spending diners to Boston's finest restaurants to feast on foie gras and Champagne is running out of steam. Just about everybody whose dinner choices were based more on the stock market than the supermarket is spending money more cautiously these days." That story wasn't from 2009; it ran eight years ago.

But just like the decade's beginning, we've got Jay Leno on the cover. The economy is again looking for the Next Big Thing, kids are still hitting the bars at Faneuil Hall every weekend, and Mayor Menino is back pulling the levers at City Hall. So while it's fun to reminisce about the good old days, they never really left.

Now let's party. Who's got some size-13 Ugg boots I can borrow? ×××

TWO EDITORS WALK INTO A BAR...

BY NICK ALTSCHULLER AND ANDREW RIMAS | PHOTOGRAPHS BY DAN WATKINS

IN A FESTIVAL OF IGUANA PICTURES, Charles Darwin's The Origin of Species turned 150 years old last month. This was a bigger deal in Britain, where evolution isn't controversial; here, we prefer our Darwinism social. There's nothing more American, after all, than getting ahead of your neighbor by clobbering him over the head with his own femur. Robust, cannibal competition is the basis of everything in our civilization, from TV commercials to Red Sox caps.

In this season of peace and goodwill, it's useful to remember those roots. For instance, by stomping all over someone else's self-worth for the sake of a momentary nip of endorphins. In this spirit, we matched The Improper's associate editor Nick Altschuller and managing editor Andrew Rimas in a battle royale of modern blood sports: bar games. Usually, the closest these two get to being red in tooth and claw is when they order buffalo wings; they're as aggressive as bunny slippers. So to focus their killer instincts, they asked several experts for guidance, and to spice up the competition, we decided the loser would have to have to mount the mechanical bull at the Liquor Store. The happy winner would get to stand at the control panel. Hail, reader! We who are about to chug salute you.

WHO DOESN'T LOVE A GOOD BAR FIGHT?

NICK:

I. BEER CHUG

By some miracle of fate or folly, Animal House is on the TV as we walk into TC's Lounge—an inviting dive with a veteran staff whose eyelids barely flicker at the sight of two grown men pounding pints at three in the afternoon.

We've come to kick off our bar games gauntlet with beer chugging, and it's the one event where I have genuine nerves. I'm all clammy as my blood retreats from my extremities to hold fort around my heart, an organ beating with more urgency than during its normal task of keeping me alive.

It's not that I lack confidence. In college I led many a boat race, and as someone obsessed with hydration—but who takes no real joy in drinking water—I down 16 ounces of liquid at least five or six times a day. The tension stems from the fact that the following games will be based on concentration, coordination and patience, all abilities I possess, but defeat isn't out of the question. Besides, chugging is innate and, twisted by the ethos of the modern man, primal. (There's a reason the activity is often followed by grunting and the smashing of cans against our evolved skulls.)

Plus, Andrew is a mysterious opponent. He was a rugger in school, and in the Northeast a rugby squad is really just a violent drinking team with snappy shirts. Also, he has a mustache, an advantageous accoutrement capable of both filtering the flow of beer and hiding an unchugged ounce.

People will say there are strategies to chugging, but much like the practice itself, these people are dumb. For example, Andrew and I decide we'll begin the contest with a traditional cheer of tapping our glasses against the bar, clinking them together, then tapping once more before our simultaneous megaquaffs. Drunks on the Internet say tapping your beer releases more carbon dioxide, thus easing your guzzle by making it less aerated. I prefer to award bonus points for riotous belching.

With the only other ground rule of no dripping, we salute each other and take off with Belushi-esque enthusiasm. Like bighorn sheep locked in combat, we battle in a few brief seconds of ferocious and fundamental idiocy. When the High Life disappears, I slam my vessel down and find Andrew still supping from his cup. Like J. Edgar Hoover in a pretty, new dress, I'm awash in a delicious combination of elation and shame.

For punishment, I task Andrew to finish the rest of our beer straight from the pitcher. As he pounds the remaining ounces, no one at the bar even turns to look.

SCORE: NICK: 1, ANDREW: 0.

II. BIG BUCK HUNTER

If I was nervous for the beer chug, I'm dangerously overconfident for Big Buck Hunter. Not limited by handicaps like a wife or children, I have an advantage, as this is a game I've had occasion to play. Thanks, crippling loneliness!

For those unfamiliar, Big Buck Hunter is a video game played with two plastic shotguns. The goal is to get more points than your opponent by killing various forms of wildlife—from moose to antelope—with some measure of speed and accuracy. Having grown exceedingly popular, this year's world championships awarded more than $70,000 in prizes.

Before our Improper duel, I get some pre-shootout tips from Ryan Cravens, who works in CoinUp sales and promotions for the game's developer, Play Mechanix. Surprisingly, his advice isn't just "shoot as fast as possible" (although that was his first suggestion).

Craven recommends that in shootout mode—the setting used for the championship, in which both players fire away at the same time—you should keep an eye on what your opponent is aiming for. "It's not the first shot, it's the final shot," he says. "You can always cherry-pick."

He also reveals that the game has Easter eggs—nerd parlance for secrets. For example, next time you're playing Big Buck Hunter Pro, choose to hunt elk. On the first stage, hit the log at the bottom of the screen. A frog will jump out, and if you can shoot it four times, you'll score a giant bonus. Of course, the only Craven tip you may need is "use your elbows." "Give 'em a hip check every once in a while," he says, because who doesn't love a good bar fight?

As Andrew is a rookie, we decide to play Big Buck Hunter Safari round-robin style, so that he can get the hang of things without the distraction of me simultaneously blasting away like Ted Nugent. Hoping that Cape buffalo will be the slowest and dumbest computerized species, we make our selection and head off to the Sudan.

The first round goes as well as I could've wished, with a headshot here and a sarcastic word of support there. But in the second round, Andrew keeps plugging away and narrowing my lead as I hit doe after doe (you can't hit girls). Not until the final bonus game do I seal the victory.

"You're a great hunter," announces the stereotyped African voiceover. And so with the buffalo down, my focus returns to getting Andrew up on the bucking bronco.

SCORE: NICK: 2, ANDREW: 0.

III. EIGHT BALL

In The Hustler, when Paul Newman's Fast Eddie Felson arrives to battle Minnesota Fats, he grabs a cue from the rack and rolls it on the table, checking for warps and bends in the wood. Like anything Newman did in the '60s, it looks real cool.

"That's a good thing to do if you want to look like a rube," says Herb Childress. Dr. Herb is a certified pool instructor with the Billiard Congress of America, and he's kind enough to teach the basics of eight ball to me and Andrew, two players that even the most ham-fisted rube could fleece for a paycheck.

To start, Dr. Herb recommends you make sure the front of the cue isn't damaged and the tip hasn't flattened, otherwise you might as well be playing with a No. 2 pencil for all the control you're going to have. If the top of the cue feels sticky, he says burnish the wood with a $100 bill, although that sounds more like a tip on how to get stabbed.

A week after our tutorial, Andrew and I arrive at Jillian's, pick out our respective weapons, and then promptly fall on them. The type of pool we play should never be discussed again. The photographic evidence should be locked away to rot next to copies of Jerry Lewis' The Day the Clown Cried and Heidi Montag's album.

It's not that we don't make use of Dr. Herb's lessons. I, for one, find the concept of the "ghost ball" quite handy. It's a rule of basic physics that when balls collide, the ball that's stationary will rocket away along the line connecting the center of the two spheres. On the opposite side of the reaction, Andrew quickly grasps the 90-degree rule, which dictates that after the collision, the ball that's already moving will continue on a path perpendicular to the one taken by the stationary ball.

With these lessons in mind, we manage to sink balls with alarming regularity. Unfortunately, it's usually the cue ball. Like trick-shot artists unclear on the concept, we keep finding new, inventive ways to scratch. I scratch off walls. I scratch trying to massé. Lining up an asinine corner shot, Andrew bets me a beer chug that I'll fail. Feeling the confidence of the clueless and seeking to further weaken my opponent, I go for it—and scratch.

IF THE CUE FEELS STICKY, BURNISH THE WOOD WITH A $100 BILL, ALTHOUGH THAT SOUNDS MORE LIKE A TIP ON HOW TO GET STABBED.

To prove our incompetence, I'm somehow winning, and when Andrew hot-potatoes victory back to me with a scratch of his own, I have ball-in-hand to seal the game. As I place the cue ball five inches behind the eight for a child's-play corner shot, Andrew reaches for every jinx in the schoolyard playbook. "There's no way you could possibly miss that shot," he taunts. And I don't—but I do scratch.

In my haste I've forgotten one of the only billiards basics I knew from the start. If I had put just a touch of backspin on the cue ball, she would have reeled her way to safety. But instead, she sank, as did my chance at a commanding lead. I'd blame Andrew, but he was only doing his job. I'd blame the beer, but then who would console me? Like Fast Eddie, I'm going to need righteous motivation to beat Andrew in a rematch. I just have to find a way to trick him into sleeping with my girlfriend.

SCORE: NICK: 2, ANDREW: 1.

ANDREW: IV. FOOSBALL

Nick is an honorable man, but I relish seeing him choke on the ashes of his own pride. We leave our pool cues and walk toward the back of the enormous hall, to a foosball table by the windows overlooking the Mass. Pike. A charcoal gloom has settled over the afternoon, turning the Friday rush hour into a phosphorescent stream in the darkness. Despite its impressive size, Jillian's feels clubby and snug against the oily weather, and I beam with cheery thoughts of smashing Nick's ego into little, crying pieces.

Except I'm terrible at bar games. Although I've spent many years polishing the brass rail, I've never had much tolerance for distractions from the actual drinking. Flirting, watching sports, fiddling with joysticks—they all seem unserious in the face of a foaming pitcher. That, and I have the hand-eye coordination of a noodle.

BREAKING BALLS

Foosball, then, has always felt alien and mysterious to me. But despite its association with soccer and its whiffy European name, foosball is a great American sport. Powerhouses like Belgium and Luxembourg may strut and crow on the tournament stage, but lots of International Table Soccer Federation winners have been Yanks. One of the all-time great players, Billy Pappas, is a Bostonian. But, then, so is Tom Brady ostensibly, and I've yet to absorb any of his athleticism or charisma.

According to the ITSF's rulebook, "The serve shall begin with the ball stopped at the middle player figure of the five-man rod." Ignoring this, Nick bounces the ball onto the table, and we angrily crank our handles. Like most other bar games, foosball is an exercise in applied physics. It's about transferring force between a wooden peg that resembles David Beckham and a plastic ball that resembles Rush Limbaugh's head. Indeed, it's very similar to pool, except there's more speed and less sangfroid. Suavity has a tendency to evaporate when you're whacking the side of a wooden box while making a noise like a howler monkey.

"A good player is one that has two essential skills," says Larry Davis, president of the United States Table Soccer Federation. "Excellent ball control and accurate passing." I have neither, nor do I have enough quarters to practice. The unholy angles at which foosball professionals pass and rocket the ball proves that table tennis, at least, ought to be worried for its status as top "I Can't Believe It's an Olympic Sport." Indeed, Davis says that the ITSF is meeting with the International Olympic Committee next year to discuss the prospect.

I'd recommend Nick for the roster. Instead of my raw, animal flailing, he controls his men, and soon leads 6-2, then 8-2. Practice, it seems, is the primary rule of bar games.

I drain my penalty beer, although it tastes a little sour. I'll have my revenge at Cornwall's Tavern.
SCORE: NICK: 3, ANDREW: 1.

V. DARTS

My favorite late-20th-century novel is London Fields by Martin Amis, without question the finest book ever written that's largely about darts. What game, after all, could be less strategic, less subject to calculated agency, less intelligent? A perfect metaphor for the human condition. Like shooting free throws, there's no trick to darts. You either make the shot, or you don't.

"The most important thing is the repetition of throwing mechanics," says Gregg Tong, marketing and communications director for the local Minute Man Dart League, the world's largest steel-tip darts league. "Practice." Obviously so, but I need to crush my opponent right now.

"Follow-through is very important," Tong suggests. "As you throw the dart, point your finger toward where you're throwing it." Also, he advises against moving your head or body, trying to limit all the action to the elbow and hand. "If you think of a catapult or trebuchet, that's what you're trying to do with your arm."

I'm not much skilled with trebuchets, as far as I know. But I am good at wiping my mind of intelligent thought (those years of polishing the brass rail, again). "Zen in the Art of Archery," says Tong. "It's a lot like that."

Nick and I step up to the oche at Cornwall's Tavern in Kenmore Square, a bright and noisy bar that seems wholly collegiate and American, except for a smattering of English draughts and three dartboards. Braced with pints of Fuller's, we begin a game of 301, a simple scoring race like the standard competition in international play. At once, Nick moves into the lead, which he keeps.

It's only when he's comfortably past the 200-point threshold that my rival reveals his secret. "I aim for the triple 14," he says, a trick he learned from chatting with Nicole Watson, president of Minute Man Dart League. That way, even when he misses, he's liable to hit the adjacent 11 or 9. I've been eyeing the treble 20, which is sandwiched between a lot of pointless 5s and 1s. So when I miss, my score wallows in the single digits.

I apply the trick and catch up fast, then close the game on a double 7. Darts, it seems, isn't all mindless tossing.

SCORE: NICK: 3, ANDREW: 2.

VI. PHOTO HUNT

We push past the scrum of Friday drinkers toward a small, neglected-looking console near the window. Here, in the reflected light of Kenmore Square's taco shops, is my last chance to even the score.

Photo Hunt is a bar game version of the activity books in which kids circle the differences between two similar images. Like most children's games, it's a joyless evil, and since it's played on a timer, the tension makes me want to bite through a piece of sheet iron. Photo Hunt champions are reputed to be able to cross their eyes like geckos, so that the two images on screen overlap, making the differences easy to spot. This sounds not only gross, but anatomically dangerous. I have no wish to sprain an optic nerve and end up wall-eyed and drooling like an American Idol hopeful.

Nick and I battle it out the traditional way, meaning we squint at photographs—and not even the pornographic ones where you get to waggle your fingers over naked models. Cornwall's game is regrettably wholesome, all kittens and sunrises, with nary a pixilated nipple. Nick goes first and racks up a respectable four screens. I follow, and am defeated on the third by a hateful image of Mr. Potato Head sitting in an armchair.

SCORE: NICK: 4, ANDREW: 2. NICK WINS. To lashings of shame, I must now add…

VII. THE MECHANICAL BULL

The Bronze Age Minoans liked to paint frescoes of naked bull-jumpers: limber, curly-haired youths with eyeliner and supple ligaments. Today's equivalent is the video clip of the plastered sorority girl straddled across a robotic farm animal. Since I'm neither limber nor a topless 18-year-old, what I'm about to do is an affront to 3,500 years of aesthetic judgment.

The Liquor Store is downstairs from Gypsy Bar, and it flaunts its populism with three stripper poles and occasional visits from the Kardashians. There's also an inflated plastic pit, in the center of which, and bearing the heft and charm of an oil derrick, stands a mechanical bull. In Spain, I've climbed into arenas overrun by little bullocks with ingrown horns, but this clunking devil is no jittery bovine. It's got a malicious intelligence behind it.

Nick stands at the control pad, grinning. He laughs as I haul myself onto the hard, leather back. As it shudders to life, Nick looks like a Goldman Sachs executive who's been given the keys to the Treasury. [Nick: I actually felt more like Dr. Frankenstein bringing his creation to life, so it could maul Igor.]

The machine starts to spin, tolerably at first. Carmelo Bari, the manager of the Liquor Store, looks on with an expression of baffled politeness. He explains that it's usually the girls who stay in the saddle the longest. Naturally, any bull operator in his right mind would waste no time in unseating a heavy-set, 36-year-old magazine editor—the jiggles come in all the wrong places. Nick, however, wants to savor the torment. [Nick: Work it, girl!]

The bull spins faster. Then it starts to bump. Muscles that have lain buried for 15 years are now straining to hold me upright. My undercarriage feels like it's beginning to fracture, and in a few moments I slide gently to the side, then land with the elegance of a bag of wet cement.

The problem with competitions, of course, is that someone always has to lose. Perhaps it's time to give peace and love a chance. ✖✖✖

Doggone It

Hits the Spots To some, this may be just another family outing, but to dog owners whose pets respond to "sit" by peeing on the carpet, The 101 Dalmatians Musical is nothing short of a staged miracle. Fifteen pups, rescued from animal shelters, hit their marks, perform tricks and refrain from humping legs during honest-to-God numbers. Along with the actors, they help foil Cruella de Vil's wardrobe aspirations. Dog lovers, catch the show at the Wang Theatre Dec. 23–27. Cat lovers, you've already had your production.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

Amelia ★ ½ The troubled life and times of America's foremost female aviator is a story overflowing with promise. Instead, director Mira Nair has mustered up the safest, most boring movie imaginable. Hilary Swank makes Amelia Earhart dull, which is no small feat considering how significant she really was. By all accounts, Earheart was a prickly, horny number, carrying on with her husband (Richard Gere, in his sad, Unfaithful, cuckold mode) and Ewan McGregor's dashing Gene Vidal. Swank and Gere are stuck doing false 1930s movie accents that can't help but alienate the audience. Swank sounds like a Katharine Hepburn pull-string doll. Overall, Amelia plays like a Wikipedia listing of Earhart's accomplishments, never summoning a real point of view. (In the suburbs.)

Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans ★★★ ½ A remake in name but definitely not in spirit, Werner Herzog's twisted riff on Abel Ferrara's grueling 1992 passion play re-imagines tragedy as farce. It's an extremely naughty, high-spirited lark carried off by the sort of go-for-broke Nicolas Cage performance we haven't seen in at least a decade. Hunched and swaggering, his eyes popping out of his head, Cage plays a drug-addled, gambling-addicted, pervert policeman investigating a drug-land slaughter. The script, by TV-vet William Finkelstein, is fairly rote, small-screen procedural stuff. The fun lies in the utter indifference Herzog and Cage display for the mystery at hand, treating it as a mere pretext for bizarre behavior and oddball non sequiturs. It's the kind of sublimely silly movie in which plot strands work themselves out through dumb luck, so we can spend more time on lucky crack-pipes, brutal interrogations of elderly women and a pack of singing iguanas. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Blind Side ★ The inspirational true story of the Baltimore Ravens' Michael Oher becomes one of the year's most inadvertently offensive movies, thanks to Sandra Bullock's rampaging ego and the kind of unconscious racism Hollywood does better than anyone else. Oher, the troubled son of a crack addict, spent much of his childhood homeless before being adopted by a rich, white family who kindly helped him fulfill his potential. But instead of focusing on Oher's moving struggle, The Blind Side spends two hours inviting us to worship the selflessness of his new mom, played by Bullock as an amalgamation of Julia Roberts' least appealing qualities. She fires off sassy one-liners in endless glamour shots, while the rest of the cast nods approvingly and tells us how great she is. Oher, played by Quinton Aaron, is given no thoughts of his own. He just thanks her profusely and does what he's told. This isn't a movie about adopting a son; it's about adopting a pet. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bright Star ★★★ The unlikely, inevitably doomed love affair between poet John Keats and fashionista Fanny Brawne might sound like the fodder of teary romance novels or tedious Masterpiece Theater episodes, but writer/director Jane Campion is after something else entirely. Campion, a doggedly idiosyncratic artist best known for The Piano, remains in awe of harsh landscapes and rumpled costumes. Often filmmakers embalm their period pieces with golden lighting and auspicious production design. Campion goes the other way, wrestling Keats' idealized lyrical interludes into a grimy, matter-of-fact reality. I always say you know a movie is working if you start to feel its weather, and Bright Star made me put my jacket back on. Sadly, Keats is a bit of a drip. Played by I'm Not There's Ben Whishaw, he comes off as a mopey emo-boy. Better are Abbie Cornish's obstinate, impassioned Fanny and Paul Schneider's revelatory supporting turn as Keats' boorish, protective patron. Still, nothing can top this movie's tactile sense of place. (In the suburbs.)

Broken Embraces ★★ Pedro Almodóvar has more than a few fervent admirers. I wish I were one of them. It might be just a personal blind spot, but with some notable exceptions, Almodóvar's work tends to exist on a too-clever, ironic wavelength that I've never been able to connect with. Broken Embraces feels like the hetero version of his 2004 movie-within-a-movie Bad Education, this time featuring Lluís Homar as a morally wayward film director fielding the fiery advances of his leading lady (Penélope Cruz)—with the added bonus of a fractured timeline to make everything seem more complicated than it really is. As much as I appreciate Almodóvar's stately compositions, his vivid use of color and his uncanny ability to get a non-terrible performance out of Cruz, the story still shrinks as it goes along. Once you start putting together the pieces, there's a lot less here than meets the eye. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Clint Eastwood tackles the unifying power of sports.

Invictus ★★★
Starring Morgan Freeman, Matt Damon, Tony Kgoroge and Marguerite Wheatly. Based on John Carlin's book Playing the Enemy. Screenplay by Anthony Peckham. Directed by Clint Eastwood. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

FOR SUCH A STRAIGHTforward, often clumsy crowd-pleaser, Clint Eastwood's Invictus still feels like a marvel of restraint. One of those movies worth admiring mainly because it might've bombed in lesser hands, the film is an exercise in withholding, in doing less with more.

Invictus will never be confused with Eastwood's major achievements, but, oddly enough, it made me appreciate his directorial approach in ways that most of his masterpieces never could. There isn't a calmer,

An Education ★★ ½ In what's sure to be Roman Polanski's favorite film of the year, dazzling newcomer Carey Mulligan stars as a 16-year-old schoolgirl who falls under the sway of Peter Sarsgaard's suave 30-something hepcat in gloomy, post-war Britain. Adapted by novelist Nick Hornby from Lynn Barber's memoir, the movie takes a tender look back at statutory rape as a rite of passage, and it's a testament to some fine performances that the film only feels icky in retrospect. There's nobody better than Hornby at dissecting all the ways people like to define themselves through their tastes and fascinations, but in nearly every other respect, his screenplay is too fussy and neat for its own good. This is a very polite, middlebrow view of what must've actually been an extremely messy affair. Director Lone Scherfig keeps everything humming pleasantly along, with even the inevitable betrayals and recriminations occurring at a genteel pitch. It's as if all the characters are afraid to raise their voices. The feel-good final reel is almost unforgivable. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Everybody's Fine ★ ½ In this ill-advised remake of Giuseppe Tornatore's 1990 tear-jerker, Robert De Niro does his worst Robin Williams impression as he hunches his shoulders, raises his eyebrows and stares mawkishly into the distance, all to indicate just how awfully sad and pathetic he is. As a recent widower seeking to reconnect with his estranged children, DeNiro takes a variety of buses and trains, eventually meeting up with brittle Kate Beckinsale, elusive Sam Rockwell and the ever-effusive Drew Barrymore. For starters, we're supposed to buy that this disparate collection of actors came from the same gene pool. Even worse, we're invited in on a conspiracy as nobody dares tell him the bad family news, despite the fact that he keeps showing up on their doorsteps. Waking Ned Devine writer/director Kirk Jones overplays the schmaltz, squandering his talented supporting cast on silly soap-opera revelations and some genuinely terrible digital cinematography. Everybody's Fine is a crappier version of About Schmidt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Fantastic Mr. Fox ★★★ ½ Writer/director Wes Anderson's fastidious, sometimes suffocating, attention to costume detail and production design make his movies feel like they're taking place in dollhouses, so it makes sense that he would work with puppets. Rendered in hand-crafted, stop-motion animation, this marvelous adaptation of the Roald Dahl story may look like one of those Rankin-Bass holiday specials from the 1970s, but it still feels like a Wes Anderson film. It's got the filmmaker's dysfunctional family pathos and droll hipster humor, only with woodland animals instead of actors. George Clooney voices the title character, a reformed chicken-thief turned newspaper columnist itching to return to his criminal roots. His antics stoke the ire of three nasty farmers, and Mr. Fox and family find themselves on the run. Boasting bone-dry vocal turns from Meryl Streep, Jason Schwartzman and Bill Murray, the movie feels like a summation of Anderson's career thus far, with certain scenes lifted almost directly from The Royal Tenenbaums and The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.) more thoughtful and compassionate filmmaker working today.

Much like Eastwood's Flags of Our Fathers, Invictus hinges on an act of shameless political calculation that served the greater good. Upon his election in 1994, South African President Nelson Mandela (played by Morgan Freeman) took a big political gamble on his nation's rugby team. Seen by most as a shining symbol of racist intolerance and hooliganism, the infamous Springboks were nearly abolished by the Rainbow Nation until Mandela stepped in.

The Springboks were beloved by South Africa's white-minority Afrikaner population. As his nation was hosting the 1995 Rugby World Cup, Mandela understood that perhaps the easiest way to begin uniting his deeply fractured country was by rallying them around one team. Invictus is wise about a lot of things, but the movie may be smartest about the ways that sports foster a sense of community, bringing together disparate groups in pursuit of a common purpose.

Freeman's Mandela isn't quite the deity you'd expect from the actor's regular, sage-like roles. Although this is only their third collaboration, Morgan is looser and cagier, the way he tends to be only in Eastwood pictures. Sly and a bit of a hound whenever he's out on the prowl, this is hardly the portrait of a plaster saint we were all expecting. Freeman plays Mandela as smarter than everyone else simply by virtue of the fact that he works harder than everyone else. He's deeply flawed, single-minded and has a way with one-liners. In short, he's an Eastwood hero.

A freakishly buffed-up Matt Damon costars as Springboks captain Francois Pienaar. He doesn't get much in the way of character development or background information, but Damon makes a middling role fascinating all the same. He settles into his newfound sense of responsibility almost silently, slowly but surely assuming leadership and commanding more and more of Eastwood's carefully composed frames. It makes perfect sense that these two unassuming artists have already begun shooting another picture together.

Invictus has problems. Anthony Peckham's screenplay is too on-the-nose, often summing up in words what we're already seeing visually. Also, Eastwood can't shoot sports. He has such a sparse style that he tends to get mucked up whenever he has to deal with more than two people in a room. The best of the rugby scenes are quietly undercut, with final scores delivered in furtive notes as Mandela's stuck in political conferences, or even better when not addressed at all. By the time the movie builds up to the big game, not only is the result beside the point, but the director's reliance on corny, slow-motion effects almost kills the spirit.

As for topical relevance, I'm not going to speculate as to why Eastwood chose to make a movie about a newly elected, politically savvy black president who's struggling to unite a divided nation in his first term. I'm just saying it's something to consider. ✖✖✖

Matt Damon delivers a sublime performance as the ultimate unreliable narrator, blowing the whistle on a price-fixing scandal while frustrating his FBI handlers every step of the way. Hidden beneath a paunch and some comically awful hair, Damon carries himself with the supreme self-confidence of a man who has no idea that he's acting like an imbecile. Picture Michael Mann's The Insider remade as a 1960s Blake Edwards farce, and you've got a sense of the jaunty vibe Soderbergh is going for. Even the narration is a goof, slyly sending up Hollywood's addiction to voiceover by allowing us to hear the title character's rambling inner monologue, which is nothing more than a breathless recitation of inane trivia. (In the suburbs.)

Law Abiding Citizen ★ ½ Stupid even for an exploitative revenge fantasy, this risible hoot stars 300's Gerard Butler as the shattered father of a murdered family. Jamie Foxx's cool, careerist DA cuts a plea agreement, not realizing that Butler will emerge a decade later in full badass mode to declare war on the American justice system. He slaughters federal judges, innocent paralegals, unsuspecting cellmates and anybody else who dares interrupt his tedious "eye-for-an-eye" monologues. The filmmakers try to have their cake and eat it, too: prompting us to cheer for Butler whenever he kills a jerk, but asking for pathos if nicer folks are caught in the crossfire. There's no coherent statement, it's just Seven for Dummies, with Butler's plans growing more absurdly complicated and inadvertently hysterical. Foxx eventually takes up arms and bellows, "F his civil rights!" at which point the audience cheered so loudly that something inside of me died. (In the suburbs.)

Naughty or Nice

Hell of a Holiday So your relatives are coming to town this month—including your crazy great aunt. If you have to spend time together, try a movie. Sitting in silence for a couple of hours has obvious perks. Plus, Gremlins is an old favorite, appealing to a multigenerational crowd. See it at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on the 18th and the 19th. As for the rest of December, make like a Mogwai and drink up.

Me and Orson Welles ★★ ½ The problem here is the "me." Adapted from Robert Kaplow's novel about the founding of the Mercury Theatre in 1937, loosey-goosey director Richard Linklater's latest film finds the least interesting avenue possible into a fascinating story. While young prodigy Welles (played with brilliant, boozy bombast by Christian McKay) struggles with his soon-to-be legendary stage revision of Julius Caesar, Linklater's picture chooses to focus on the romantic travails of a bit player, a role assumed with no discernible charisma by teenage heartthrob Zac Efron. Will Claire Danes' unspeakably boring secretary deign to deflower young Zac? And does anyone care that Welles is about to kick-start his career? Linklater seems to sense our ambivalence, as a gigantic chunk of the movie is devoted to replicating Welles' landmark production, with plenty of room for the uncanny James Tupper as Joseph Cotten. Me and Orson Welles often plays like 1930s fan-fiction, with Efron's tedious drama occasionally interrupting the story. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Men Who Stare at Goats ★★ ½ Half-formed comedic conceits spray like buckshot across director Grant Heslov's disappointingly cartoonish adaptation of Jon Ronson's exposé on the madness of military psych-ops. Ewan McGregor, who narrates every damn moment of the film, plays a depressed reporter following George Clooney's possibly insane ex-soldier into Baghdad during the early days of the Iraq War. On the road, Clooney tells a tale of the New Earth Army, a top-secret unit that attempted to train cadets in the paranormal arts. Believe it or not, most of this stuff is true. Unfortunately, Heslov's direction cheapens the material by going for broad buffoonery and slapstick where precision is required. Jeff Bridges recycles too many Dude-isms as a hippie squad leader, while Kevin Spacey tiresomely twirls his moustache as a cardboard villain. Everybody's mugging for the camera, but Clooney almost saves the film singlehandedly. Deftly deadpanning outrageous monologues, he plays it straight and sad, improbably getting us invested in this silliness. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Paranormal Activity ★ Don't believe the hype. This $15,000 cheapie drew some fleeting attention at festivals a couple years ago and now arrives on a tsunami of tweets thanks to a massive, cynical marketing campaign from Paramount Pictures. Purporting to be the found home video footage of a spectacularly uninteresting couple (Katie Featherson and Micah Sloat), the movie chronicles Katie's troubles with a vaguely defined, undead stalker. This is the laziest, most annoying demon in recent film. What passes for scares involve the creature clomping around the attic like an annoying upstairs neighbor, or every once in awhile turning on the lights in an empty room. Nothing here is novel or even remotely believable. Filmmaker Oren Peli doesn't seem to understand that everyone already saw The Blair Witch Project 10 years ago. The closing shot provides one genuinely great jolt, and it turns out that was only recently added by Steven Spielberg. (Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Road ★★ If you've read Cormac McCarthy's Pulitzer-Prize–winning novel, you're probably wondering how it could possibly lend itself to a satisfying adaptation. The relentlessly grim tale of a man and his young son wandering through a post-apocalyptic wasteland, McCarthy's book is a collection of unsettling anecdotes lacking the kind of forward momentum that movies require. Rendered faithfully here by director John Hillcoat, The Road is a miserable slog through an ashen, ruined landscape, punctuated by random attacks from redneck cannibals. Viggo Mortensen stars as the father, appearing emaciated and ill, reciting chunks of the novel's prose in voiceover. Charlize Theron appears briefly in flashback as the mother, fleshing out a couple scenes McCarthy only suggested. Hillcoat supplies images of magnificent desolation, but it's still a hopeless dirge with no variation in tone. A guy and his kid pushing a shopping cart toward certain doom worked on the page, but the film leaves an audience with no point of entry. One note played well is still only one note. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

A Serious Man ★★★★ Grappling with mysteries on a deceptively mundane stage, the latest gem from Joel and Ethan Coen is about the silence of God. Set in a Minneapolis suburb circa 1967, the film stars Michael Stuhlbarg as a college physics professor and human doormat whose entire life begins to crumble one day with the kind of one-thing-after-another momentum that the Coens typically apply to their crime pictures. It's The Book of Job according to a couple of wisenheimer skeptics. Larry's search for celestial explanation leads him up the hierarchy of local rabbis in a series of agonizingly funny and fruitless counseling sessions and rambling parables. As usual, the Coens are being dismissed in some circles as snickering, nihilistic yuksters. But such a reading willfully ignores A Serious Man's deliberately open-ended, questioning structure. In the end, do any of us really have any choice but to accept the mystery? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

2012 ★★ With films like Independence Day, Godzilla and The Day After Tomorrow under his belt, director Roland Emmerich obviously has a hankering for mass destruction. With a plot based on the Mayan

calendar's prediction of an apocalypse, this is his silliest fetishization of annihilation yet. John Cusack stars as a failed sci-fi writer and deadbeat dad who somehow finds time to patch things up with his family while speeding through earthquakes and outrunning flowing volcanoes. Danny Glover plays the sad sack president charged with preserving civilization as his pragmatic aide (Oliver Platt) butts heads with Chiwetel Ejiofor's idealistic scientist. If there's anything harrowing about hundreds of millions of people dying horrible deaths, this cheerfully tasteless movie doesn't dwell on it. Instead we get some plucky heroics, garish stereotypes and one extremely lucky dog. Most of the world perishes, but at least Cusack's daughter learns to stop wetting the bed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: New Moon ★ And you thought the first one was terrible? This second installment of Stephenie Meyer's awful ode to sexual repression is so glum, dreary and snail-paced, it feels like it plays in slow-motion. Pining, as always, for sparkly vampire Edward Cullen (Robert Pattinson, still looking vaguely embarrassed to be here), Kristen Stewart's depressed Bella pouts, whines and stares off into space a lot. With Edward out of the picture for most of the running time, she tries to distract herself with the happy, shirtless visage of Taylor Lautner's Jacob. But Bella has rotten luck with boys, as every guy who takes a shine to her seems to end up being some sort of supernatural beast. Though his waxed chest might lead you to believe otherwise, Jacob is actually a werewolf, and so we suffer through more of Meyer's lame mythology and lots of annoying emo posturing. It takes an awfully long time for nothing to happen in New Moon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Up in the Air ★★★ ½ Director Jason Reitman's sturdy, crowd-pleasing adaptation of Walter Kirn's novel is best when it allows George Clooney to subtly toy with and deconstruct his tabloid persona. Clooney stars as a blissfully single corporate tool who spends 300 days a year flying from town to town, firing folks whenever their cowardly bosses need to outsource the axing. Streamlined, efficient and preaching a gospel of "no luggage," Clooney meets his match in Vera Farmiga's randy road warrior and finds himself forced to rethink his philosophy when Anna Kendrick's up-and-coming protégée threatens his way of life. It's slick, classy entertainment, more beholden to Billy Wilder than Judd Apatow. Reitman's occasional bouts of glibness are no match for Clooney's seemingly effortless, soul-searching work. The handsome bastard is able to suggest sudden, midlife bouts of yearning without making a big show of it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Where the Wild Things Are ★★★ ½ There's an almost unbearable undertow of melancholy in director Spike Jonze's arty adaptation of Maurice Sendak's 1963 picture book. It's an extraordinarily subjective experience, burrowing so deeply into the child's perspective that the movie works as a Rorschach test for viewers. Some are left completely cold, others in tears. Count me in the latter camp. Drawing out Sendak's sparse sentences to feature length, Jonze and his coscreenwriter Dave Eggers sketch the unhappy world of young Max (Max Records) with swiftness and clarity. Max is a lonely, angry child of divorce, who one night retreats into his imagination, where he becomes king of a wild band of beasts. Each of these marvelous, towering Muppets represents an aspect of Max's troubled home life, and their nonsensical games encompass the gamut of childhood anxieties, with petty jealousies and temper tantrums always circling back around to a gnawing fear of abandonment. It's not a perfect film, but I doubt something so raw and deeply felt ever could be. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Young Victoria ★★ There are always a few largely uneventful, handsomely photographed costume dramas kicking around at Oscar time. This particular case offers Emily Blunt—dulling down her natural sass to portray the young titular queen—bristling against her mom's (Miranda Richardson) attempts to usurp the throne via a Regency loophole. A charisma-free Rupert Friend shows up as Prince Albert, who might as well be in a can for all the sparks he helps generate. Forbidden love doesn't so much throb as hum listlessly in the background. Writer Julian Fellowes has followed his brilliant, Oscar-winning Gosford Park with such a succession of dead-end, period screenplays, it's safe to say director Robert Altman was the one who truly deserved that award. The only life comes from Jim Broadbent, who, as the doddering, dying king, brings a spark of mischief to an otherwise humorless museum piece. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

ONE AND TEN

Sizing up albums of the year and the decade

POST-MILLENNIAL POPULAR music has largely outgrown labels both corporate and stylistic: indie-rock, jam-rock, prog-rock and hip-hop all tend to overlap. Here are my CD picks for both 2009 and our rapidly diminishing decade.

2009

Dirty Projectors Bitte Orca Soulful and abstract vocal harmonies blend and blur next to guitar lines that evoke both Led Zeppelin and West Africa in this brilliant mishmash.

Regina Spektor Far Playful, sophisticated piano-pop is broken down to its catchiest syllables.

Animal Collective Merriweather Post Pavilion Organic and electronic elements beat as one in dream-like pop euphoria.

Antony and the Johnsons The Crying Light Antony Hegarty transcends worldly worries with the tremulous voice of an angel.

Phoenix Wolfgang Amadeus Phoenix The French connection to modern pop confection, iced with synth-buoyed exuberance.

Avett Brothers I and Love and You Carolina-bred brothers eschew their hillbilly raveups to etch piquant piano ballads under producer Rick Rubin's steady hand.

The Hidden Cameras Origin: Orphan This Toronto collective trades its onetime "gay church folk music" tag for lush pop that's alternately coy and ominous, evoking both Depeche Mode and the Moody Blues.

Brother Ali Us The Minneapolis rapper expands his empathetic social insights with beatbuilder Ant and a funkified band.

Akron/Family Set 'Em Wild, Set 'Em Free Recast as a trio, this combo combines psychedelic rock, choral folk and free jazz with raw spontaneity and kaleidoscopic glee intact.

Green Day 21st Century Breakdown These matured punks polish up another ambitious, more cleanly defined classic-rock opera.

THE 2000S

Radiohead Kid A (2000) In Rainbows may be more cohesive, but Radiohead launched its second decade of creative-rock dominance with this trend-setting electronic reinvention. Its mind-buzzing peaks far outweigh its ambient valleys.

Wilco Yankee Hotel Foxtrot (2002) Jeff Tweedy and company mix dread, dissonance and delight on a subtly masterful set of songs that the band's original major label famously rejected.

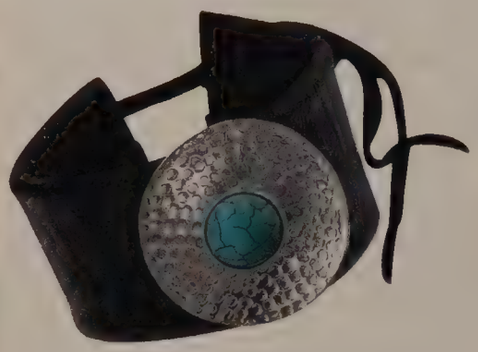
OutKast Stankonia (2000) This Atlanta duo designed their own P-Funky mothership to blast hip-hop into an eccentric universe where the soulful pregnancy apology "Ms. Jackson" coexists with electro-jungle-gospel detonator "B.O.B."

Fleet Foxes Fleet Foxes (2008) Earthy, ethereal folk-pop takes flight through the Seattle quintet's evocative multipart harmonies.

Jay-Z The Blueprint (2001) Rap's ruler holds court with his headstrong flow while Kanye West and Eminem lend backing tracks.

Neko Case Fox Confessor Brings the Flood (2006) Case inhabits wide-open spaces with her force-of-nature voice, leaving pesky alt-country associations in the dust.

Sufjan Stevens Illinois (2005) This singer and multi-instrumentalist's unusual indie-pop masterpiece is both precise and precious in its homespun orchestrations and haunting ruminations on that Midwestern state's lore.



Arctic Monkeys Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not (2006) Oh, to be young, cynical and living in northern England, and talented enough to translate that life into tart post-punk vignettes with whiplash turns.

My Morning Jacket It Still Moves (2003) The taproot of this Kentucky band's bearish riffs and ghostly, reverb-hung vocals is poised to grow beyond its debt to Neil Young.

Amy Winehouse Back to Black (2007) Personal chaos aside, the beehived soul singer uncorked a classic record with help from co-producer Mark Ronson and the Dap-Kings. ✖✖✖

Rockin' Around the Whomping Willow

Holiday Magic

While waiting for the final installments of the Harry Potter movies, nothing quite satisfies the wizard itch like reliving Hogwarts in song. Dynamic brotherly duo Harry and the Potters are coming to town for the fifth annual Yule Ball. Their clever and true-to-book albums have earned them national acclaim, and not just with the kiddies. With odes to potions class, Quidditch and Dumbledore, they prove that "Voldemort can't stop the rock." On Dec. 20, they'll be joined by Draco and the Malfoys, the Whomping Willows and MC Kreacher at the Middle East.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION, BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER CHOKING A CHICKEN AT THE CAPON FAIR, HELD ON DEC. 20 IN ST. JULIA DU GRAS CAPOU, FRANCE.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Keira Anderson and Karen Gutierrez took us to see the Tour d'Eiffel, or as it's called in English, "1,063 feet of compensatory symbolism."

Douglas Padden, John Murnane, Robyn Manouk and Charlie Sullivan went to London's Wembley Stadium to see the Pats play Tampa. In the spirit of their host nation, they then beat each other with lager bottles.

Students Megan Lusty, Jasmin Robbins, Gabe Wells and Adriana Wilford posed with their guide Markinio and teacher Jeff Wilford in Brazil's Pantanal, the world's largest wetland. Figures they'd end up swamped with homework.

Mayor Scott Avedisian of Warwick, Rhode Island, liked our magazine so much, he installed a blue box in Warwick's airport. Of course, to reach it you have to stand in line for an hour, remove your shoes and place your toiletries in a plastic bag.

Table for Eight
4 men. 4 women. For dinner

MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late 20s to late 40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 80 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 10 engagements that they know of that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

I went to the Public Radio Gala, and all I got was a lousy tote bag.

Just kidding. The fundraiser for WBUR (90.9), held at the Intercontinental, was less of a crunchy granola affair than a soignée, sophisticated one, and it attracted the likes of journalistic icon Ted Koppel, his esteemed colleague, Jeff Greenfield, auto didacts Click and Clack (aka Tom and Ray Magliozzi), BU VP Peter Fiedler (son of the late, great Pops conductor), the station's head honcho, Paul LaCamera, and his lovely wife, Mimi, nonconformist Brahmin Linda Cabot Black, media mogul Ron Ansin, Somerpuddlians Geoff Hargadon and Patricia LaValley, Indobox drummer Quinn Ferree, NPR president and CEO Vivian Schiller and assorted on-air talent, including the va-va-voomalicious Bianca Vazquez Toness. Then there were the husband and wife who answered the question, "What are you doing here?" by saying, "What do you mean? We're such raging liberals, we're practically lesbians!"

The highly edifying evening included a fascinating discussion of the current state of journalism (besides their penchant for promotional coffee mugs and The Three Tenors CDs, NPR listeners are apparently a fairly cerebral group). Dinner was delicious; the company was scintillating. And for the record, I left with a $2,500 gift certificate for something I needed badly and only paid $1,350 for in the silent auction. Beats the hell out of a tote bag any day.

There's Something About Mary

Multiple Choice: "The High Priestess of High Fashion" is: A) Lady Gaga; B) Whichever drag queen is onstage at that particular moment; or C) A glossy coffee table book about Mary McFadden.

If you guessed C, you were probably among the lucky guests at MassArt's celebration for the legendary designer, who incidentally, rocks a severe, black hairdo better than Louise Brooks, Edith Head and Diana Vreeland combined (if you didn't get that, you probably didn't get the drag queen joke, either).

On hand to accept the school's top honor—the President's Award for Creative Achievement—McFadden was also good enough to loan items from her personal art and fashion collections for a free exhibition downstairs from the gallery where the dinner was held.

While models slouched around the tables in classic examples of her work, the mostly female crowd (some wearing vintage McFadden) enjoyed a delicious meal and a chance to shop for jewelry; each centerpiece was an original piece by a MassArt alum, and all were up for grabs.

Front and center: Red Sox stalwart and homey, who's no slouch in the design department, either, Joseph Abboud (who helped MassArt president Kay Sloan bestow the honors), the ethereal Trevania Dudley Henderson, brunette stunner Eve Rounds, Miss Massachusetts Amanda Kelly (with more bobby pins than I thought possible pinning her crown to her head), benefactor Sandy Bakalar, the Jewish answer to Barbara Eden, Cheryl Franklin, up-and-coming designer Jeury Rosario (who created an evening gown that was auctioned off after dinner), and one woman who looked up at the stage while McFadden and Abboud were posing for pictures and said, "Mary and Joseph, together again."

All Grown Up

Dinner at the Mandarin Oriental to help an amazingly worthy cause while priming your liver for the onslaught of the holidays? Who in their right mind would say no to that?

No one, which is why there wasn't an empty seat in the ballroom at the gala for Boston Medical Center's Grow Clinic.

Waging the uphill battle against malnutrition in local children were the likes of the clinic's founder and director Dr. Deborah Frank, staunch supporters like Joan and Ted Cutler and Joan and Steve Belkin, newly appointed ambassador to Spain Alan Solomont and the lovely Susan, investment wonder twins Wes and Paul Karger, the smoking hot trio of Brelyn Spindel, Emily Mareb and Katie O'Brien, board chair Ted English, mega-philanthropists Marsh and Missy Carter, Four Seasons GM Bill Taylor and the flawless Karyn, the evening's honoree Elaine Ulllian, handsome devil John Fish and the Reverend Ray Hammond, who pronounced "chutzpah" with an impeccable Yiddish accent to general applause.

The night's most ironic, pathetic or amusing comment (take your pick): The woman who said, "I want to catch the flu. I need to lose a few pounds." ✖✖✖
